I Introduction

This paper presents some analyses of the 2001 General Election. The figures in it are based on the House of Commons Library's elections database, which is consistent with results produced by the Electoral Commission.¹

The main points of the election were:

- Labour won the most seats and most votes to give it a majority of 166 (Table 1a);
- The Conservative share increased by 1.0 percentage points and they had a net gain of a single seat;
- The Liberal Democrats increased their number of seats by six to 52, their highest total since 1929;
- In Wales, Plaid Cymru's share of the vote increased by 4.3 percentage points moving them into third place in terms of votes won (Table 1c);
- In Scotland, the Scottish National Party lost one seat to the Conservatives. The Liberal Democrats overtook the Conservatives in Scotland to take the third highest number of votes.
- The Ulster Unionists lost three seats to the Democratic Unionists and two to Sinn Fein. The Democratic Unionist share of the vote increased by 8.9 percentage points, while Sinn Fein's increased by 5.7. Sinn Fein had more votes than the SDLP.
- Turnout was 59.4%, the lowest level since 1918.²

Comparisons in this paper are with the position after the 1997 General Election rather than at dissolution. Four seats were held by different parties at dissolution compared with the position after 1997. These were West Bromwich West (Labour at dissolution, was Speaker in 1997), Glasgow Springburn (Speaker was Labour), Romsey (Liberal Democrat was Conservative) and South Antrim (Democratic Unionist was Ulster Unionist).

Throughout the paper turnout is defined as valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. The electorate figures used were provided by to the Electoral Commission by returning officers. A candidate loses their deposit if they gain less than 5% of the votes in a constituency. Only parties registered with the Electoral Commission are included in the paper – other candidates are recorded as independents.

Section II of the paper gives some more analysis of the results while section III contains a number of reference tables summarising results at the national, regional and county level. Section IV gives summary results for each constituency.

II Analysis of results

This section offers some analysis of the results. A set of reference tables is given in the next chapter.

A. Seats won

Overall, Labour won the election with 412 seats, 6 down from their total in 1997 but still the second highest number of seats gained by one party since the war. The Conservatives won 166 seats, an increase of a single seat. The Liberal Democrats won 52, their highest total since 1929. For the second election running an independent candidate won a seat: Dr Richard Taylor in Wyre Forest campaigning as Kidderminster Hospital & Health Concern. The previous independent MP, Martin Bell, did not fight his Tatton seat, which was regained by the Conservatives, but did stand in Brentwood & Ongar where he failed to defeat the sitting Conservative MP.

Only 29 seats changed hands at the 2001 General Election, the lowest number since October 1974 (Tables 14 and 15).³ The Conservatives made nine gains – including five from Labour – but lost eight seats – seven of them to the Liberal Democrats. All of the Conservative gains were seats that they had lost in 1997. The Ulster Unionists lost five seats in Northern Ireland - half of their total from 1997 - three to the Democratic Unionists and two to Sinn Fein. They gained North Down from the United Kingdom Unionists to take their total to six.

B. Votes

The total number of valid votes cast was 26.4 million, the lowest total since 1945. Labour won with 10.7 million, the lowest number polled by a winning party since 1929 and fewer than their total in the 1979 and 1992 elections which they lost. Nationally, there was little change in the share of the vote for the major parties. The Labour share fell by 2.5 percentage points with the Conservative share increasing by 1.0 points and the Liberal Democrats' increasing by 1.5 points (Table 1a).

There were regional variations in the change in share (Table 6). The Labour share fell most in Wales and the North East, while it increased in the South East. The Conservative share increased in all regions except for London, Scotland and Northern Ireland (where the party only fielded three candidates). The Liberal Democrat share fell only in the South West. Plaid Cymru increased their share of the vote in Wales by 4.3 percentage points (Table 1c) and the Liberal Democrats were the only main party in Scotland to gain share.

³ 29 seats changed hands at the October 1974 election; 28 seats changed hands in 1951. These figures include only those elections where there were no boundary changes. British Electoral Facts: 1832-1999, Rallings and Thrasher, Parliamentary Research Services, Table 2.12

Table 26 shows the constituencies where there were large changes in the share of the vote for the main parties. A feature of the 2001 election was that there were significant increases and decreases in each party's share of the vote in particular constituencies; this is contrary to the model of uniform swing.

Table A shows the average changes in share of the vote by the 1997 result. This shows that the Labour share fell in the safer seats that they held at both the 1992 and 1997 General Elections. The Liberal Democrats increased their share most in seats that they won from the Conservatives in 1997.

Table B looks at changes in share according to party placings in 1997. This shows that in seats where the Liberal Democrats were second to the Conservatives in 1997 their share increased but where Labour was second the Liberal Democrat share fell.

As a proxy for looking at results by rurality Table C shows share of the vote, change in share and number of seats won in borough and county constituencies⁴. Labour had the highest share in both Borough and County constituencies and also won the most seats in both categories.

⁴ As designated by the Boundary Commission. Any constituencies with more than a small rural element are classed as County Constituencies and all other constituencies are Borough Constituencies.

C. Turnout

Turnout was 59.4% the lowest recorded since 1918. Turnout fell in England, Scotland and Wales although it increased in Northern Ireland. In 2001 Northern Ireland had the highest turnout of the home countries, it had the lowest in 1997 (Table 22). The regions with lowest turnouts were the North West and London (Table 5) with the North West and Scotland having the largest falls in turnout (Table 6).

The highest turnout in Great Britain was Winchester with 72.3%, although this was beaten by four Northern Ireland constituencies (Table 23). Table 24 shows the largest falls in turnout by country. All seats in Great Britain had a fall in turnout, with turnout falling in half of the Northern Ireland seats as well.

Table D shows turnout by the 1997 result and for borough and county constituencies. Turnout was lowest and fell most in seats won by Labour in both 1992 and 1997. Turnout was higher in the more rural county constituencies.

County constituencies	62.5%	-11.4

D. Candidates

There were 3,319 candidacies⁵, representing 73 registered parties, 139 independents and The Speaker. The total of candidates is 405 fewer than in 1997. Table E shows the number of candidates in each seat by country.

636 candidates were women. Table F shows the number of candidates by gender for the main parties. The total of 118 women elected in 2001 is two fewer than in 1997.

According to the organisation Operation Black Vote, there were 16 Conservative, 16 Labour and 25 Liberal Democrat ethnic minority candidates.⁶ Of these, twelve candidates, all Labour, won seats.

⁵ Some candidates stood more than once.
