

General Election 2010

Final Edition

RESEARCH PAPER 10/36 2 February 2011

No single party won an overall majority at the 2010 General Election, for the first time in the UK since February 1974. The Conservatives won the most seats, 306, a net change of 96 compared with notional 2005 general election results. Labour were down by 90 seats, leaving them with 258, while the Liberal Democrat total of 57 was five fewer than 2005.

General Election 2010 provides detailed analysis of the results of the 2010 General Election. The data for votes cast and electorates agree with the official results published by the Electoral Commission. This Research Paper replaces the analysis published on 8 July 2010 which used provisional data.

Summary

A UK General Election was held on 6 May 2010.¹

- No single party won an overall majority of the 650 House of Commons seats.
- The Conservatives won 306 seats, Labour won 258 and the Liberal Democrats 57.
- The Conservatives polled 10.7 million votes, 36.1% of the total. This compares with 32.4% of votes in the previous General Election in 2005.
- Labour took 8.6 million votes, 1 million fewer than in 2005. In 2010 their vote share was 29.0%, 6.2% points down on 2005, and 10.7% points lower than in 2001.
- The Liberal Democrats' 6.8 million votes, 23.0% of the total, was 1.0% points higher than their 22.0% share in 2005.
- Compared with the (notional) results of the 2005 election, Labour lost 94 seats; the Conservatives lost 4 seats; the Liberal Democrats lost 13 seats. The Conservatives gained 100 seats, Labour gained 4 seats and Liberal Democrats gained 8 seats. The effect of these gains and losses is a net change for the three main parties:
 - Conservative +96
 - Labour -90
 - Liberal Democrats -5
- Plaid Cymru's share of the vote fell relative to 2005. They won three seats, up one on the notional 2005 results. The SNP share of the vote rose slightly and they won six seats, no change on 2005.
- The Democratic Unionists won eight of the 18 seats in Northern Ireland, one fewer than in 2005. Sinn Féin polled more votes in Northern Ireland than any other party and won five seats, the same as in 2005. The SDLP won three seats, unchanged from 2005. The Ulster Conservatives and Unionists have no MPs, having lost the seat held by the UUP before the agreement with the Conservatives.
- Caroline Lucas won Brighton Pavilion the first ever seat for the Green Party; and Naomi Long won Belfast East, the first seat to be won by the Alliance Party at a General Election.
- The Speaker, John Bercow, won in Buckingham and Lady Sylvia Hermon was elected as an Independent in North Down in Northern Ireland.
- Turnout was 65.1%, 3.7% points higher than in 2005.

2010 General Election seat winners: equal sized constituencies

In the map below all 650 constituencies in the UK are shown as equal size. This is an attempt to overcome the problem of disproportionate weighting of constituencies in other maps. Labour constituencies, for example, tend to be urban and smaller in area than rural Conservative areas and a map with equal sized areas provides an alternative presentation which is not affected by these factors.

Each rectangle represents one constituency, coloured according to the winning party. Black lines show Government Office Region boundaries.

1 Introduction

No single party won an overall majority in 2010, for the first time in a UK general election since February 1974. The Conservatives won the most seats, 306, 96 more than in a notional 2005 general election on the new constituency boundaries. Labour lost 90 seats, leaving them with 258, while the Liberal Democrats were down five on 57. However, the pattern was uneven: all three major parties both gained and lost seats.

The Conservatives won 36.1% of the vote, up by 3.7% points and a higher share of the vote than Labour won to secure an overall majority in 2005. Although they lost seats and underperformed on their opinion poll position in the lead up to the election, the Liberal Democrat share of the vote was up 1.0% points on 2005 to 23.0%.

Between them the Conservatives and Liberal Democrats won 59.1% of the popular vote, the largest share for a subsequent Government since World War II.

Labour won 29.0% of the vote, their lowest since 1983 and down 6.2% points compared with 2005. 35% of voters voted for parties other than Labour and the Conservatives, the highest since 1918.

Share of the vote by party, UK

Share of the seats won by party, UK

The swing from Labour to the Conservatives was 4.9%. However, there was considerable variation between seats. Some top Conservative targets did not change hands, whereas some requiring much larger swings than the national average did.

29.7 million people cast valid votes, a turnout of 65.1%, 3.7% points more than in 2005.

The Conservative-Liberal Democrat coalition leaves the DUP the second largest opposition party, with 8 MPs, though their leader, Peter Robinson, lost his seat. The Scottish National Party were unchanged on six seats while Plaid Cymru were up one on their notional 2005 position with three seats.

The Green Party and the Alliance Party won their first House of Commons seats. The BNP and UKIP both increased their shares of the vote but did not come close to winning a seat.

Based on the 2010 result and uniform national swings between Labour and the Conservatives the results of the next general election would change to a Conservative or Labour majority/largest party as follows:

- Conservative majority: the Conservatives would need a swing from Labour of about 2% points
- Labour majority: to win an absolute majority, Labour would require a swing from the Conservatives of around 5% points
- Labour largest party in House of Commons: Labour would need a swing from the Conservatives of around 2% points

Following the 2010 election the safest seat in percentage terms is Liverpool Walton, held by new Labour MP Steve Rotheram with a majority of 57.7%. The largest majority in terms of votes is 27,826 for Labour's Stephen Timms in East Ham.

Of the 200 safest seats, 106 are held by the Conservatives, 83 by Labour, four by the Liberal Democrats and seven by other parties.

The seat with the smallest majority – four votes – is Fermanagh and South Tyrone, held by Michelle Gildernew for Sinn Fein. Labour's Glenda Jackson has the next smallest majority – 42 votes or 0.1% – in Hampstead and Kilburn.

Of the 200 seats with the smallest majorities, the Conservatives hold 83, Labour 80, the Liberal Democrats 27, and other parties 10.

The Conservatives were second in 79 of the 200 most marginal seats, Labour were second in 73 seats, the Liberal Democrats in 40, and other parties in eight.

4 Seats changing hands

117 seats changed hands compared with notional 2005 General Election results, 18.0% of seats contested. The Conservatives gained 100 and lost 4, a net increase of 96; Labour lost 94 seats and gained 4, a net decrease of 90 seats; the Liberal Democrats gained 8 and lost 13, a net decrease of 5.

In Scotland, no seats changed hands, with the exception of Glasgow North East which was the former House of Commons Speaker's seat in 2005 and was won by Labour in 2010. In Wales the Conservatives won five additional seats, four from Labour and one from the Liberal Democrats. Two seats changed hands in Northern Ireland; the Alliance Party won their first House of Commons seat and the former UUP MP Lady Sylvia Hermon was elected as an Independent. The Green Party gained its first House of Commons seat by winning Brighton Pavilion from Labour.

5 Who voted for which party?

There are no breakdowns of votes cast by characteristics of voters. Figures are made public for the total number of votes cast for each candidate by constituency only. Opinion surveys can, however, give an idea of how party support varies between different groups. Data below are from Ipsos MORI's aggregate analysis of polls undertaken before polling day. These are based on around 6,000 individual respondents who said they were absolutely certain to vote, adjusted to match actual results.

These figures show a Conservative lead over Labour across all groups, with the exception of Social Class DE (particularly women in this group), men aged under 25, women aged 25-34, and those living in social rented housing. The Conservatives vote share increased strongly among those aged 25 to 44 relative to 2005. Further separate analysis is becoming available from the British Election Study funded by the Economic and Social Research Council.²

5.2 Conservative

The charts below show Conservative performance in 2010 by social characteristics, based on Ipsos MORI estimates:

- The Conservatives won 38% of the vote among men, compared with 36% among women.
- Conservative support was higher in older age groups, higher social classes and among those who own their homes outright.
- Conservative support is weakest among those in social rented homes and for men aged 18-24 and women aged 25-34.

- The Conservatives were successful in increasing their vote share across almost all social groups, especially amongst 25 to 34 year olds.
- The increase in support for the Conservatives was also relatively large among social and private renters and those in the lowest social classes.

5.3 Labour

The charts below show Labour performance in 2010 by social characteristics, based on Ipsos MORI estimates:

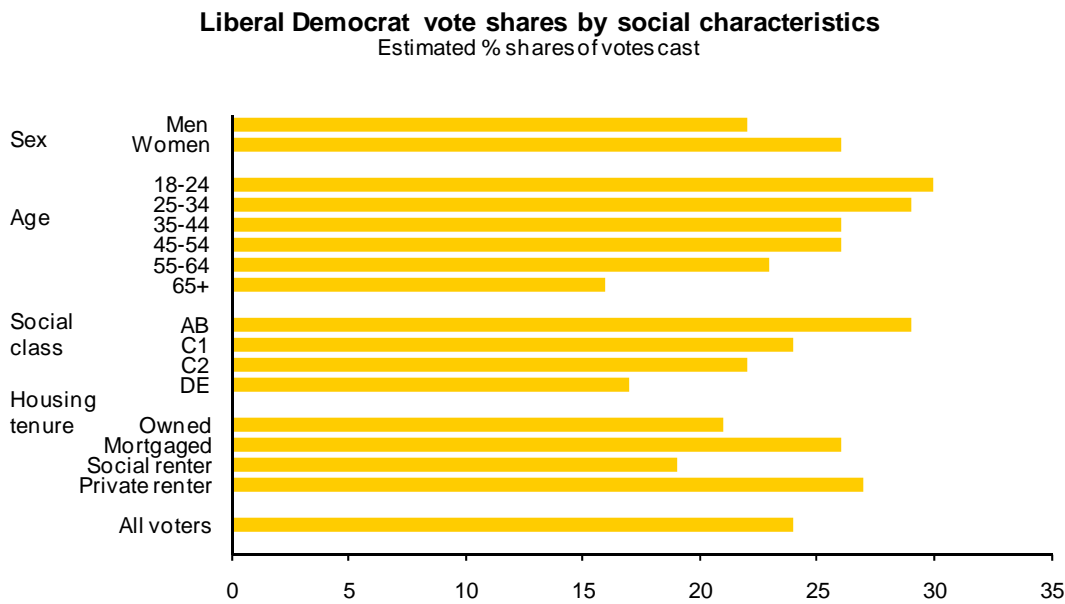

- 31% of women voters supported Labour compared with 28% of men.
- Labour’s support is highest among social renters and the lowest social class. 47% of those in social rented homes voted Labour and 40% in social class DE.
- Support for Labour varied little in relation to age, although there were some differences between the sexes. For those aged 18-24, 34% of men supported Labour, compared to 29% of women. For those aged 25-34, 27% of men supported Labour compared to 38% of women.

Change in Labour vote shares 2005-2010 by social characteristics
Estimated % point change in % share

- Labour lost vote share relative to 2005 in all the social groups considered above (as they had in 2005 compared with 2001).
- Loss of vote share was more for women (-7% points) than men (-6% points).
- The largest fall of 11% points was for social class C2, followed by a 10% points fall was for the 35-44 group.

5.4 Liberal Democrat

- The Liberal Democrats won 26% of votes among women, compared with 22% for men.
- Liberal Democrat vote share tends to decline with age and increase with social class. Their 30% of the votes of 18-24s is the same as the Conservatives and 1% point behind Labour. The Liberal Democrats' 29% vote share among social class AB puts them second to the Conservatives with 39%, ahead of Labour's 26% for the same group.

- Liberal Democrat Support was up by 3% points for women, but unchanged on 2005 for men.
- They gained vote share for all age groups except for those aged 65+.
- Liberal Democrat vote share stayed the same for ABs, increased for C1s and C2s and declined for DEs.

5.5 Conservative leads over Labour

The charts below break down the Conservative lead over Labour in 2010 by social characteristics of voters, based on MORI estimates:

- The Conservatives had a lead over Labour across all the social groups considered above, except for the lowest social class and social renters and (just) for 18-24s.
- The data for men and women hides a big gender difference among those aged 25-34. For men in this age group there is a Conservative lead of 18% points; for women Labour is ahead of the Conservatives by 11% points.

- The Conservatives' lead over Labour grew relative to 2005 for all the social groups considered above (as it had in 2005 over 2001).
- The change in the Conservative vote share against the Labour share was particularly marked for those aged 25 to 44, the lower social class groups and those in rented homes (social and private)

6 Candidates

4,150 candidates stood in the election across the 650 constituencies. 3,820 candidates stood for one of the 133 parties represented³, together with 330 independents (including 24 candidates giving no description) and the Speaker. This was the highest number of candidates on record, 596 more than in 2005 and 425 more than the previous record, set in 1997.⁴

6.1 Candidates by sex

21% of the candidates (874) were women, and 79% (3,276) were men, equivalent to 1.3 women and 5.0 men per seat. In 2005, 20.3% of candidates were women, and in 2001 the figure was 19.3%. Of the main parties, Labour had the highest number and percentage of female candidates.

In terms of votes and seats won per candidate, Conservative women candidates were less successful than their male counterparts. The reverse was true of female candidates standing for Labour. The Liberal Democrats' female candidates on average won a similar number of votes than the party's male candidates, but won a smaller percentage of seats.

³ This includes all parties registered with the Electoral Commission, as well as the party description used by one candidate which was not registered with the Electoral Commission but was recorded on the Statement of Persons Nominated and the Declaration of Result of Poll for the constituency where the candidate stood.

⁴ Some individuals stood in more than one constituency and are counted in each.

6.2 Candidates by age

At 18 years 36 days (on 6th May), the independent candidate for Erewash, Luke Wilkins, is believed to be the youngest candidate. 95 year-old Robert Leaky, standing for the Virtue Currency Cognitive Appraisal Party in Skipton and Ripon, is thought to be the oldest; Mr. Leaky was also the oldest candidate in the 2005 election.

6.3 Candidates by party and placing

The Liberal Democrats had the most second and third-placed candidates. 99% of Labour candidates were placed third or above. Most candidates from other parties were placed fifth or lower.

7 Characteristics of those elected

7.1 Sex, ethnicity and new MPs

Of 650 MPs elected in the 2010 General Election, 143 (22.0%) are women, the highest number and proportion ever. There are 49 Conservative female MPs, 32 more than in 2005. Labour has 17 fewer female MPs than in 2005 although the proportion for female Labour MPs has increased to 31%. Of the three main parties, Labour has the highest proportion of female MPs; the Conservatives have 16% and Liberal Democrats 12%.

Of all those elected in 2010, 64% had been MPs in the previous Parliament. Five MPs from earlier Parliaments were returned, Christopher Leslie, Stephen Twigg, John Cryer, Geraint Davies, and Jonathan Evans. The remaining 227 (35%) have no previous House of Commons experience.

27 MPs elected in 2010 are from minority ethnic groups. Seventeen of these are elected to Parliament for the first time. The number of minority ethnic Conservative MPs is nine higher than in the previous parliament and for Labour the number is up by three. The Liberal Democrats are yet to have a minority ethnic MP elected at a General Election.

Of MPs elected in the 2010 General Election:

- 69% of Liberal Democrats were first elected between the 1997 General Election and prior to the 2010 General Election, compared with 49% of Labour MPs and 33% of Conservative MPs.
- 48% of Conservative MPs were first elected in the 2010 General Election, compared with 24% of Labour MPs and 18% of Liberal Democrat MPs.
- 7% were first elected at by-elections, including 12% of Labour, 9% of Liberal Democrats and 3% of Conservatives.
- Conservative MP for Louth and Horncastle, Sir Peter Tapsell, has the longest continuous service, and therefore becomes Father of the House. He was first elected at the 1959 General Election, having contested a by-election in Wednesbury in February 1957. At the time of the election, he had been an MP for a total 49 years, his service only interrupted between the 1964 and 1966 General Elections.

7.4 Education

- 54% of Conservative MPs, 14% of Labour MPs and 39% of Liberal Democrats attended private schools. Around three-quarters of MPs are university graduates and over a quarter of MPs attended Oxbridge universities.
- Twenty MPs are Old Etonians, nineteen of whom are Conservatives; one is a Liberal Democrat. It is the first election since 1923 that there have been no Old Etonians elected as Labour MPs.⁵

7.5 Occupation

Of the Conservative, Labour and Liberal Democrat MPs elected:

- 35% have a professional background; this includes 14% who were barristers or solicitors and 8% who were teachers in schools or in universities and colleges.
- A quarter have a background in business, although the proportion varies across the parties. 41% of Conservative MPs have a business background, compared to 8% of Labour MPs and 19% of Liberal Democrat MPs.
- One in seven (14%) was previously a politician or political organiser. The proportion of MPs from this occupation has been rising at each election since 1983, when only 3% of MPs elected had such a background.
- 4% were manual workers; most of these (22 out of 25) are Labour MPs. The proportion of MPs who were manual workers has declined from 12% in 1983 and 16% in 1979.⁶

8 The electorate and turnout

8.1 Electorate

The UK parliamentary electorate on 6 May 2010 was 45,597,461.

The electorate varies considerably by constituency. The largest seat, the Isle of Wight, has 40,000 more electors than the UK average while the smallest, Na h-Eileanan an Iar, has 48,000 fewer.

Highest and lowest constituency electorates

		Electorate
1	Isle of Wight	109,922
2	East Ham	90,674
3	Manchester Central	90,110
4	North West Cambridgeshire	88,851
5	Holborn and St Pancras	86,563
6	Milton Keynes South	86,559
7	Oxford West and Abingdon	86,458
8	Ilford South	86,220
9	West Ham	85,313
10	Croydon North	85,216
	UK average	70,150
641	Aberavon	50,838
642	Cynon Valley	50,650
643	Ynys Môn	50,075
644	Montgomeryshire	48,730
645	Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross	47,263
646	Dw yfor Meirionnydd	45,354
647	Aberconwy	44,593
648	Arfon	41,198
649	Orkney and Shetland	33,085
650	Na h-Eileanan an Iar	21,780

On average, seats won by the Conservatives had larger electorates than those won by Labour and, to a lesser extent, than those won by the Liberal Democrats. On average Conservative seats had around 3,900 more electors than Labour seats.

Average constituency electorate by winning party

8.2 Turnout

Turnout, measured as valid votes as a proportion of the May 6 electorate, was 65.1% across the UK, 3.7% points higher than in 2005. The table below shows the highest and lowest constituency turnouts:

Highest and lowest constituency turnouts			Turnout
1	■	East Renfrew shire	77.3%
2	■	Westmorland and Lonsdale	76.9%
3	■	Richmond Park	76.2%

648	■	Birmingham, Ladywood	48.7%
649	■	Leeds Central	46.0%
650	■	Manchester Central	44.3%

The highest turnout in the UK was in East Renfrewshire, where turnout was just over 77%. The lowest turnouts are mostly in urban areas. In six constituencies turnout was below 50% – these include Thirsk and Malton where the poll was postponed.

Turnout across constituencies which elected a Conservative MP was 7.3% points higher than in areas with a Labour MP.

649	Hampstead and Kilburn	LAB	CON	42	0.1%
650	Fermanagh and South Tyrone	SF	IND	4	0.0%

The safest seat in percentage terms is Liverpool Walton, held by new MP Steve Rotheram for Labour with a majority of 57.7% or 19,818 votes. The largest majority in terms of votes – 27,826 or 55.2% of votes – is East Ham held by Stephen Timms for Labour.

The safest Conservative seat by both absolute and percentage majority is Richmond in Yorkshire, held by William Hague with a majority of 43.7% or 23,336 votes.

The safest Liberal Democrat seat in percentage terms is Orkney and Shetland, held by Alistair Carmichael with a majority of 51.3% or 9,928 votes. The safest Liberal Democrat seat in terms of number of votes is Nick Clegg's Sheffield Hallam seat, with a majority of 15,284 or 29.9% of votes.

The least safe seat – in both percentage terms and number of votes – is Fermanagh and South Tyrone, held by Michelle Gildernew for Sinn Fein with 4 votes (0.0%). Labour's Glenda Jackson has the next smallest majority, in Hampstead and Kilburn, with 0.1% or 42 votes, followed by the Conservative Daniel Byles with a majority of 0.1% or 54 votes in North Warwickshire.

The Liberal Democrat with the smallest percentage majority – again both in percentage terms and in terms of the number of votes – is Lorely Burt in Solihull with a majority of 175 or 0.3% of the number of votes. A listing of all seats by marginality is in Section 18.

10 Election miscellany

10.1 Records and firsts

- A coalition in power for the first time in more than 60 years.
- This election brought the end of the longest continuous Labour government. Labour were in office for over 13 years, since the 1997 General Election.
- Caroline Lucas, elected in Brighton Pavilion, is the first Green Party MP.
- Naomi Long is the first MP elected for the Alliance Party, although she is not the first Alliance Party MP – William Stratton Mills, who was elected as a Unionist, later resigned from the party and sat as an Alliance member during 1973 and 1974.⁷
- The first three Muslim female MPs were elected in 2010 – Shabana Mahmood in Birmingham Ladywood, Rushanara Ali in Bethnal Green and Bow, and Yasmin Qureshi in Bolton South East. The first Muslim woman member of Cabinet is Baroness Warsi, as Minister without Portfolio. At least 89 Muslim candidates ran in the election – this is a record number.⁸
- The Coalition government includes Liberal Democrat ministers; these are the first ever Liberal Democrat ministers although there have been Liberal ministers before.
- At 43, David Cameron is the youngest Prime Minister since the Earl of Liverpool took office in 1812, aged 42. Tony Blair was also 43 on taking office in 1997, but was a few months older than David Cameron when becoming Prime Minister.

10.2 Family ties

A number of new MPs have a family link to other politicians:⁹

- Jack Dromey is married to MP Harriet Harman.
- Benedict Gummer is son of the former MP John Gummer, who was given a peerage in the May 2010 dissolution honours list.
- Jo Johnson is the brother of ex-MP and London Mayor Boris Johnson.
- Valerie Vaz is the sister of current MP Keith Vaz.
- Anas Sarwar is the son of previous MP Mohammad Sarwar, who was MP for the same constituency (Glasgow Central).
- Ian Paisley Junior is the son of previous MP Ian Paisley, who was MP for the same constituency (North Antrim) and who was given a peerage in the May 2010 dissolution honours list.
- Zac Goldsmith is the son of former French MEP Sir James Goldsmith and the grandson of MP Major Frank Goldsmith.
- Caroline Nokes is daughter of former MEP Roy Perry.
- Mark Pawsey is son of former MP James Pawsey.
- Jacob Rees-Mogg is son of Lord Rees-Mogg.

⁷ <http://www.ark.ac.uk/elections/dnb.htm>

⁸ Muslim News

⁹ Many of these links were identified by the Madano Partnership, as was the political experience of the new MPs.

- Laura Sandys is daughter of former MP Lord Duncan-Sandys.
- Julian Sturdy is son of MEP Robert Sturdy.
- Robin Walker is son of former MP Lord Walker of Worcester.
- Paul Blomfield is married to MEP Linda McAvan.

10.3 Political experience

- Five previous MPs return after time away from Parliament – John Cryer, Geraint Davies, Jonathan Evans, Christopher Leslie and Stephen Twigg.
- New or returning MPs Jonathan Evans, Chris Heaton-Harris, Neil Parish and Caroline Lucas all have been MEPs.
- New MPs Alun Cairns and Glyn Davies have both been Welsh Assembly Members – Alun Cairns remains an Assembly Member.
- New MPs Margaret Curran and Cathie Jamieson are both currently Members of the Scottish Parliament.
- New MPs Ian Paisley Jnr, Jim Shannon, Margaret Richie and Naomi Long are also members of the Northern Ireland Assembly.
- New MPs Bob Blackman, Angie Bray and Eric Ollerenshaw have all been members of the London Assembly.

12 Incumbent MPs who were defeated

76 candidates who were MPs at the end of the 2005-10 Parliament were defeated.

14 By-elections and changes of allegiance 2005-10

Comparisons in this paper are made on the basis of results at General Elections. This section summarises the fourteen by-elections during the 2005-10 Parliament and lists the MPs who changed party allegiance over the period. Full by-election results are available in House of Commons Library Research Paper 10/50, By-elections 2005-2010.

14.1 By-elections

There were fourteen by-elections during the 2005-10 Parliament. Eight of the fourteen by-elections were caused by the death of the sitting MP. The remaining six were due to resignations, notably Tony Blair in Sedgefield (July 2007) following his resignation as Prime Minister and Boris Johnson in Henley (June 2008) who was successful in his bid to become Mayor of London.

The table summarises the results:

By-elections 2005-10: summary results

	Date	Result	Winner	Change in % since 2005 (% pts)				Turnout
				LD	CON	LAB	SNP/PC
Cheadle	15 July 2005	L Dem hold	Mark Hunter	3.3%	2.0%	-4.2%	...	55.2%

Blaenau Gwent	29 June 2006	Ind hold	Dai Davies	1.2%	1.4%	4.7%	4.1%	51.7%
Bromley & Chislehurst	29 June 2006	Con hold	Robert Neill	17.5%	-11.1%	-15.6%	...	40.5%
Ealing, Southall	19 July 2007	Lab hold	Virendra Sharma	3.2%	0.9%	-7.3%	...	42.9%
Sedgefield	19 July 2007	Lab hold	Philip Wilson	8.0%	0.2%	-14.1%	...	41.5%
Crewe & Nantwich	22 May 2008	Con gain	Edward Timpson	-4.0%	16.9%	-18.3%	...	57.7%
Henley	26 June 2008	Con hold	John Howell	1.8%	3.5%	-11.7%	...	50.3%
Haltemprice & Howden	10 July 2008	Con hold	David Davis	...	24.1%	34.1%
Glasgow East	24 July 2008	SNP gain	John Mason	-19.0%	-0.6%	-8.4%	26.1%	42.2%
Glenrothes	06 November 2008	Lab hold	Lindsay Roy	-10.0%	-3.3%	3.2%	13.1%	52.3%
Norwich North	23 July 2009	Con gain	Chloe Smith	-2.2%	6.3%	-26.7%	...	45.8%
Glasgow North East	12 November 2009	Lab win	Willie Bain	2.3%	33.0%

Labour had won 8 of these 14 constituencies in the 2005 General Election, with the Conservatives taking 3, the Liberal Democrats 1 and an Independent also winning 1. Labour retained 4 constituencies in the subsequent by-elections, and lost 4 - Dunfermline & West Fife to the Liberal Democrats, Crewe & Nantwich and Norwich North to the Conservatives, and Glasgow East to the SNP.

At the 2010 general election, Labour held Livingston, Ealing, Southall, Sedgefield, Glenrothes and Glasgow North East, and regained three seats – Dunfermline & West Fife from the Liberal Democrats, Blaenau Gwent from an Independent and Glasgow East from the SNP. The Conservatives retained all five of their seats won in the by-elections (Bromley & Chislehurst, Crewe & Nantwich, Henley, Haltemprice & Howden and Norwich North) whilst the Liberal Democrats held Cheadle.

14.2 Changes of party allegiance & party status

During the 2005-10 Parliament, there were a number of changes that affected the balance of the parties in the House of Commons, in addition to those caused by by-elections. These are detailed by MP as follows:

- Clare Short (Birmingham, Ladywood) – from Labour to Independent Labour (2006)
- Quentin Davies (Grantham & Stamford) – from Conservative to Labour (2007)
- Robert Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby) – from Labour to Independent (2007)
- Andrew Pelling (Croydon Central) – whip suspended (2007); contested Croydon Central in 2010 as an Independent, but lost
- Derek Conway (Old Bexley & Sidcup) – whip withdrawn (2008)
- Bob Spink (Castle Point) – resigned the Conservative whip (March 2008), joined UKIP (April 2008) then became an Independent (November 2008)
- Ian Gibson (Norwich North) – resigned from the Labour Party (2009)
- Michael Martin (Glasgow North East) – resigned from post of Speaker (2009)
- John Bercow (Buckingham) – elected Speaker of the House of Commons (2009)
- Iris Robinson (Strangford) – resigned (2010)
- David Chaytor (Bury North) – suspended from Labour Party (2010)
- Jim Devine (Livingstone) – suspended from Labour Party (2010)
- Elliot Morley (Scunthorpe) – suspended from Labour Party (2010)
- Sylvia Hermon (North Down) – from Ulster Unionist to Independent (2010)

Only two of these MPs, John Bercow and Sylvia Hermon, were re-elected at the 2010 General Election.

At the end of the 2005-10 Parliament there were 3 vacant seats: NW Leicestershire, Middlesbrough South and East Cleveland (following the deaths of David Taylor MP and Ashok Kumar MP) and Strangford (following the resignation of Iris Robinson).

15 Polling Day

The General Election was held on 6th May 2010, a Thursday for the 19th consecutive time. The polls were open from 7am to 10pm. In Thirsk and Malton voting was postponed until 27th May 2010.

15.1 Local and mayoral elections

Local elections were held in 164 of the 351 English local authorities on 6th May. 4,223 council seats were up for election, 20.4% of the total in England. Four mayoral elections were also held, in Hackney, Lewisham, Newham and Watford.¹⁰

Election day weather for 2010 was similar to that for UK general elections over the last 30 years. February 1974 stands out as being a both cold and wet election day, but this was not unusual for that time of year. Election days in July 1945 and June 1970 were the warmest days for general elections since 1931; and November 1935 was the wettest.

15.3 Election night

The chart below shows the number of seats declared for each party as election night unfolded.

The BBC/ITV/Sky exit poll was released at 10pm and predicted the final result to within four seats for each party.

For the fifth consecutive election, Houghton and Sunderland South¹¹ was the first constituency to declare, 52 minutes after the 10pm close of poll. It missed the record it set in 2001 by nine minutes. Two other parliamentary constituencies in Sunderland also declared quickly, Washington and Sunderland West at 23:26 and Sunderland Central 23:41. These were the only constituencies to declare a result on polling day itself.

22 constituencies (excluding Thirsk and Malton) did not begin counting until the day after polling day and it was not until 5.06pm that the last result was declared.

For the first time for many years, ballots were counted overnight in Northern Ireland, and constituencies there were among the first to declare results. In previous elections, counting had not started until the following morning for security reasons.

¹¹ Prior to the fifth Boundary Review, this constituency was Sunderland South. The boundary changes increased the size of the electorate and there were 7,309 more votes cast than in 2005.

15.4 Queues at the close of poll

During the final hours of polling, queues formed outside some polling stations and there were reports of people being unable to vote after they closed at 10pm. The Electoral Commission published an interim report into these problems on the 20th May¹² based on interviews with Returning Officers, feedback from political parties, and 500 comments submitted to the Commission by individuals affected. The Commission cited inappropriate assumptions about turnout, inadequate management and poor contingency planning as common factors causing the problems. It also criticised the restrictiveness of existing rules governing the close of poll, which provide no leeway for those in the queue at 10pm to be issued with ballot papers.

Twenty-seven polling stations in sixteen constituencies were identified by the Commission as experiencing problems at the close of poll. These are shown in the table below. In none of the constituencies could the scale of the problems, as estimated, have affected the result.

16.2 Opinion polls

The increased number and frequency of opinion polls in this general election campaign enables the major shifts in voting intention that occurred to be tracked. Summarised below are results from 92 polls from nine different polling companies for the period of the election campaign. All results given are for Great Britain.

Results of all these polls for the three main parties and others (in grey) are illustrated below. Individual poll results are given as single dots, the lines are seven day averages and the election day results are for comparison. Dates are based on the midpoint of the fieldwork for each poll.

A general point to note is the innate variability in the results from individual polls. Nine different polling companies means there is a wider range of methodology and hence more scope for variations linked to this. More fundamentally, they are sample surveys most of which include between one and two thousands responses. However well such samples are chosen they will always be subject to some sample variation – voting intentions from the sample may not accurately reflect those of the entire population at the time. This is down to pure chance. The sample chosen randomly may include a disproportionate number of supporters of one party. The impact of this sample variation falls as the sample size grows. Polling companies generally quote a margin of error of $\pm 3\%$ points for a sample size of around 1,000. This assumes a genuinely random and representative selection and no other biases.

The seven day averages filter out some of this statistical ‘noise’ as there can only be large and/or consistent shifts in poll results over a number of days. They lag behind any step-changes in voting intentions. Such changes are highly unusual, but the reaction to the first televised election debate on the evening of April 15th provided one. Percentage support for the Liberal Democrats was previously in the high-teens or low twenties with only a very slight upward trend. The first polls carried out after this debate put Liberal Democrat support at around the 30% mark and this did not fall to consistently below 30% for another 10 days. Both the other main parties saw a dip in their support, but the fall in Conservative support was slightly greater at 4-5% points compared to around 3-4% points for Labour. More significantly it gave the Liberal Democrats higher poll ratings than Labour for the first time in a quarter of a century.¹³

There was no other shift in opinion in the campaign on anything like this scale. In the three weeks from the first televised debate to polling day support for the Conservatives increased by around 2.5% points. Support for the Liberal Democrats fell by a similar amount and support for Labour increased by around a single point. The polls indicated that Labour had regained a consistent but slight lead over the Liberal Democrats in the last few days of the campaign.

The Conservative lead over Labour (based on the seven day averages) fell to below 6% points during the middle of April. It increased consistently over the final two weeks of the campaign and reached an average of 7.4% points in the final week. This was only slightly higher than the 7.2% point gap in shares of the vote in the election.

So-called 'Bigotgate' (28 April) had no noticeable negative impact on Labour's poll ratings, but the party was already at a relatively low level and it did not pick up much support in the last couple of weeks.

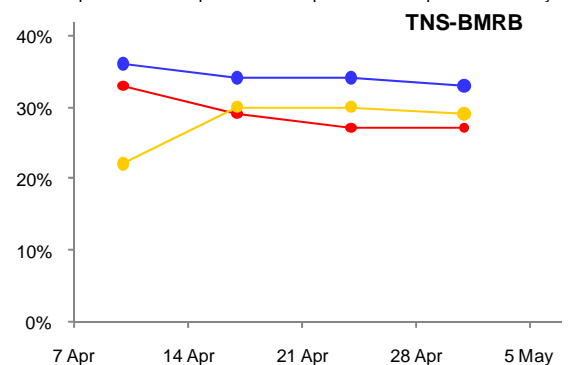

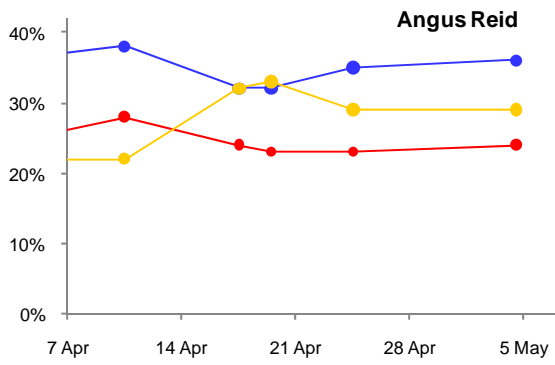

Support for the Conservatives in campaign opinion polls varied from 31% to 41%. Their lead over Labour varied from 3 to 12% points. Labour's poll ratings varied from 23% to 33%. The Liberal Democrat's rating varied from 16% to 34%. They were ranked in second or second equal place on 39 of 92 polls and first/first equal on six polls. Five polls put the gap between first and third place at 4% points, all were taken in the week after the first televised debate.

Results from individual polling companies

The next two pages look at trends in support for the three main parties recorded by each polling company. These cover a large variety of poll frequency, sample sizes, dates, durations of fieldwork and methodologies. Some of the key points are:

- The largest average Conservative lead over Labour (10% points) and lowest average Labour rating were recorded by Angus Reid.
- TNS-BMRB results had the lowest average lead for the Conservatives (5% points). They conducted four polls during the campaign each of which was carried out over a whole week.
- All polls put Labour in third place immediately after the first televised debate.
- All companies that covered the whole campaign had the Liberal Democrats finishing on a higher rating than they started and the Conservatives slightly down. Only Harris has Labour finishing on a higher rating than that at the start of the campaign.
- YouGov carried out polls on virtually every day of the campaign and hence their results give a great deal of detail as well as a consistent methodology. Their results depict most clearly the fall in Liberal Democrat support from its peak in mid-April. Their daily polls recorded little consistent change in support for any of the three main parties in the final two weeks of the campaign.

¹³ Based on Guardian/ICM poll ratings: <http://www.guardian.co.uk/news/datablog/2009/oct/21/icm-poll-data-labour-conservatives>

Comparison with the final result

The opinion polls cover Great Britain where on election day the Conservatives took 36.9% of the vote, Labour 29.7%, the Liberal Democrats 23.6% and other parties 9.9%. Compared to this, opinion polls in the final days of the campaign indicated lower levels of support for the Conservative and Labour and higher levels of support for the Liberal Democrats. Clearly these polls were taken before election day so a direct comparison is a harsh test. There could have been shifts in public opinion between the final polls and the election. However, if opinion polls are to be used to predict the composition of the House of Commons after the election then the final poll results before election day ought to be compared to vote shares. The British Polling Council has done this for its members – the nine companies included here. According to them the polls just before the 2005 General Election were the most accurate ever. The 2010 polls were less accurate but ‘told the main story of the 2010 election.’¹⁴ A comparison is summarised below.

Final opinion polls results compared to the election result

Higher than election	Angus Reid, TNS-BMRB (29%) ComRes, YouGov (28%) Harris, Ipsos MORI, Populus (27%) ICM, Opinium (26%)
Same as election	ComRes, Populus 37%	Conservatives 36.9%	Labour 29.7%
			Liberal Democrat 23.6%
Lower than election	Angus Reid, ICM, Ipsos MORI (36%) YouGov, Opinium, Harris (35%) TNS-BMRB (33%)	Harris, Ipsos MORI (29%) ComRes, Populus, ICM, YouGov (28%) Opinium, TNS-BMRB (27%) Angus Reid (24%)

The fieldwork dates for the final polls varied from 29 April-4 May for TNS-BMRB to 4-5 May for the final ComRes, Angus Reid, Populus, YouGov, Harris and Ipsos MORI polls. Overall the final Ipsos MORI and ICM polls were closest across all three main parties with an aggregate difference of 5% points. The final TNS-BMRB was furthest away (12% points) but this can be explained in part by the dates of their fieldwork. Politicalbetting.com looked at all polling companies including those outside the British Polling Council and found that a poll carried out in early May by Indian company RNB Research was the most accurate with an aggregate error of 4.2% points.¹⁵ The play of chance, via sample variation, should be borne in mind when drawing conclusions from these types of comparisons.

The consistent gap between the final poll ratings of the Labour Party and their share of the vote raise the possibility that there is a systematic bias or error in the polls. The last time this was raised in a major way was following the 1992 General Election. The Conservative Party was seeking a fourth term, but was behind in the polls. On election day it gained 42.8% of the vote in Great Britain, but its final poll ratings were around 5% points lower than this. The similarity with the Labour Party in 2010 is strong in some respects, but less so in others such as the size of the ‘under reporting’, levels of support and of course the final result. Since 1992, polling companies have changed their methodologies, particularly how they adjust for non-response and allow for factors such as likelihood to vote and past voting patterns. This had improved the accuracy of final polls up to 2005, but the 2010 result, the impact of the televised debates and a coalition Government could all mean further changes are needed in how polls are put together, to more accurately reflect the current political situation.

16.3 Leadership debates

For the first time in British politics, the leaders of each of the three main parties took part in Prime Ministerial Debates during the general election campaign. Each debate ran for ninety minutes, and was broadcast weekly by ITV, BSkyB and the BBC over three successive Thursday evenings, starting on 15 April. The first half of each debate focused on a particular topic - domestic affairs, foreign affairs and the economy respectively - with the second half allowing for a discussion of general issues, with questions picked from the audience. They took place in various locations across the UK– the first in Manchester, the second Bristol and the final debate was in Leicester.

They were the first such debates to be broadcast live in the run-up to a UK election, with average viewing figures across all the stations they were broadcast on of 9.4 million, 4 million and 8.1million for each debate respectively. Even though the second debate only averaged 4 million viewers across the television networks, it gave Sky News its biggest ever peak audience of 4.6 million.

The first debate was the most popular, with a peak audience of 9.9 million viewers, as opposed to 4.6 million for the second and 8.3 million for the final debate. According to Ipsos MORI, the public thought that the leader debates would be important in determining how they voted. Three-fifths (60%) said the performances of Brown, Cameron and Clegg in the debates were important in helping them to decide who to vote for.

In addition, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland had their own television debates, between the main party leaders from each country. Scotland and Wales each held three debates, whilst Northern Ireland staged two.

17.1 Daily newspapers

Guardian 30/04/2010 The liberal moment has come

If the Guardian had a vote it would be cast enthusiastically for the Liberal Democrats. But under our discredited electoral system some people may – hopefully for the last time – be forced to vote tactically.

<http://www.guardian.co.uk/commentisfree/2010/apr/30/the-liberal-moment-has-come>

Independent 05/05/2010 This historic opportunity must not be missed

there is a strong case for progressively minded voters to lend their support to the Liberal Democrats wherever there is a clear opportunity for that party to win. Yet in those constituencies where there is likely to be a close fight between Labour and the Conservatives, there is an equally strong case for voters to cast their ballot to keep out a Tory party which incarnates this discredited "business as usual" approach to politics.

Telegraph 04/05/2010 Only a Tory government can restore nation's fortunes

Difficult times lie ahead for Britain. We believe that only a Conservative government can restore the nation's fortunes.

Daily Express 05/05/2010 Cameron has earned the right to lead our nation

This newspaper's attitude towards politicians and their parties is largely dictated by how they measure up to the time-honoured values of its readers: a belief in fair play, hard work, strong law and order, patriotism and support for the family. According to all these values and more David Cameron has earned the right to govern. We urge you to give him a mandate to get Britain going in the right direction again.

Daily Mail 05/05/2010 Vote decisively to stop Britain walking blindly into disaster

the Mail urges readers to vote Conservative tomorrow. David Cameron is the best and perhaps the only hope on offer for Britain. And in this tightest of contests, he will need every last vote he can get. Don't waste yours

Sun 06/05/2010 Can Britain take five more years of hard Labour?

The Tories have earned their chance. Whether you are voting for the first time, or have backed Labour in the past, we believe the modern Conservative Party deserves your vote. ... if you want a better Britain, and if you feel that hope is better than despair, join The Sun in placing your trust in David Cameron today.

Mirror 06/05/2010 Be smart, for your children's sake. Vote Labour

We don't need to like or love Mr Brown to vote Labour. We do need, however, to acknowledge the incontrovertible truth that we're better off under him and Labour, the nation's future safer with Labour – so don't gamble on Cameron's untrustworthy Tories. We strongly urge a vote for Labour today to avoid waking up tomorrow to the nightmare of the political heir of Maggie Thatcher and John Major sneaking into Downing Street.

Financial Times 03/05/2010 The case for change in the UK

Britain needs a stable and legitimate government to navigate its fiscal crisis and punch its weight abroad. On balance, the Conservative party best fits the bill.

Times 01/05/2010 Vote of confidence

The economy is broken and so is politics. It is time for a change, in both the philosophy and the style of government. It is time for us to believe in the power of the individual, the strength of society and the unique promise of this country. Labour is tired, defensive and ruinously reliant on higher government spending. David Cameron has shown the fortitude, judgment and character to lead this country back to a healthier, stronger future. It is time, once again, to vote Conservative.

Daily Star 04/05/2010 Your vote is so vital

Listen to all parties and their policies. Make sure you know what they stand for. And then put your X in the right box. Britain needs you to elect the best man for the job.

Daily Record 06/05/2010 It's your future

Values and vision are what this election boils down to. Labour's are clear. But Cameron offers nothing, especially for Scotland.... This will be the closest election since 1992. Every seat counts. Every vote counts. Scotland has 59 seats at Westminster. That's 59 chances to save Britain from the nightmare of Cameron and Osborne on Downing Street. Make sure your vote counts.

<http://blogs.dailyrecord.co.uk/recordview/2010/05/its-your-future.html>

Herald 05/05/2010 All to play for in this make-or-break poll

The Herald does not presume to tell its readers how to vote. All we would say is this: listen to your head as well as your heart. Above all, go out and vote. There is too much riding on this make-or-break poll to sit at home and do nothing.

<http://www.heraldscotland.com/comment/herald-view/all-to-play-for-in-this-make-or-break-poll-1.1025217>

Scotsman 05/05/2010 Vote for a new era

The Scotsman regrettably finds itself in the unusual position of not being able to endorse any of the big four parties with any enthusiasm...You must ask who offers most to a new parliament and who can help bring refreshing change. Or who will just give you more of the same? If you have a candidate who ticks the first two boxes, no matter who they represent, give them your vote.

<http://news.scotsman.com/opinion/Vote-for-a-new-era.6272135.jp>

Western Mail 06/05/2010 Today, you chart the course for a generation

The Western Mail isn't in the business of telling its readers how to vote. ... Wales and the rest of Britain can have a great future - but what that future looks like isn't up to the Western Mail, or even to the politicians. It's up to you.

Belfast Telegraph 05/05/2010 Time to cast off the blinkers

The Belfast Telegraph will not be supporting any particular party in Northern Ireland at this election. ... There is hope that cross-community, imaginative, taboo-breaking ideas and thinking can continue to emerge and when they do that they find fertile, not barren ground, on which to grow. For that reason alone we urge you not to abandon the democratic process. Turn out tomorrow and vote. Keep in the game so to speak, for we may even win it in the end.

17.2 Sunday newspapers

Express on Sunday 02/05/2010 Vote Cameron or surrender our country to ruin and indecision

As things stand the choice is very clear. A vote for David Cameron 's Conservatives is the quickest way to get Britain moving again. A strong Tory administration will be able to make the changes and repair the damage done by Labour. A vote for David Cameron and his party will prove that Britain is back in business.

<http://www.express.co.uk/ourcomments/view/172748/General-Election-2010-Vote-Cameron-or-surrender-our-country-to-ruin-and-indecision>

The Observer 02/05/2010 Nick Clegg is the candidate of change

There is only one party on the ballot paper that, by its record in the old parliament, its manifesto for the new one and its leader's performance in the campaign, can claim to represent an agenda for radical, positive change in politics. That party is the Liberal Democrats. There is only one way clearly to endorse that message and that is to vote Liberal Democrat.

Independent on Sunday 02/05/2010 Vote for change. Real change.

if you believe that we are on the cusp of a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, then join with us, and vote for the change that really matters. Use your democratic right to enhance the democratic rights of all. Vote for a hung parliament, and a better, fairer, greener Britain may just be ours.

Mail on Sunday 02/05/2010 Who can you trust to clear up this mess?

Britain needs strong Government, not weak. Fewer politicians, not more. One purpose, not a coalition of the weak and the weary in uneasy alliance with the whimsical. ... For all these reasons Mr Cameron and the Conservatives should be trusted with your vote.

<http://www.dailymail.co.uk/debate/article-1270380/Who-trust-clear-mess.html>

Sunday Telegraph 02/05/2010 The only choice for Britain

David Cameron has, over the course of the election debates, come to look the part as prime minister. But to make the changes that Britain needs, he and his party must have the mandate to govern. A hung parliament would be fatally prone to haggling, horse-trading and indecision, with the resulting coalition – of whatever stripe – unable to take the bold and difficult decisions that will be needed. The best choice for Britain is a Conservative government with a strong majority. But no one should underestimate the scale of the task it will face.

<http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/election-2010/7664142/The-only-choice-for-Britain.html>

Sunday Mirror 02/05/2010 Nightmare... on Downing Street

Your vote on Thursday is about your future, your children's future and the future of our nation. It is not a time to punish Gordon Brown. Use your vote carefully - where Labour have no chance of getting in, vote Lib Dem to keep Cam out. Voting for your first choice could unwittingly let your worst nightmare in.... here is only one serious answer to the challenges that lie ahead. That is Labour.

<http://www.mirror.co.uk/news/top-stories/2010/05/02/nightmare-on-downing-st-115875-22227550/>

News of the World 02/05/2010 Time for a leader of vision

A hung Parliament, triggering a coalition government, is the worst of all possible results. And the world is watching for that weakness, forcing a run on the Pound and on shares that will send interest rates and mortgages soaring and savings and pensions plummeting. But all that can be avoided. Britain is desperate for change. By Friday, David Cameron could begin rebuilding everything we hold dear. Your vote on Thursday has never been more precious.

Sunday Times 02/05/2010 Tories deserve a chance to govern

The Tories are articulating the most dynamic vision for Britain at a time of economic crisis. The dividing line in this election is an old one: between a Labour party veering back to its old ways and believing big government is best and a Tory party that wants a smaller state and greater individual freedom. ... Britain needs a change of government on Thursday and a decisive outcome. This can only mean that the best solution will be an outright Conservative victory.

http://www.timesonline.co.uk/tol/comment/leading_article/article7113942.ece

The People 02/05/2010 Time for leaders to be serving this country together

It is not for a politically independent newspaper to lecture readers on how you should vote. So you will already know that a balanced Parliament can only be brought about by tactical voting in certain marginal constituencies. ...To get a balanced Parliament and coalition government means voting Labour in any constituency where the party is a close second to the Tories. And voting Lib Dem everywhere it is a close second.

<http://www.people.co.uk/news/2010/05/02/good-balance-93463-22227892/>

Scotland on Sunday 02/05/2010 Backing the Lib Dems is real vote for change

Proportional representation will mean a visible end to the old yah-boo system and will force politicians to mature. Consensus politics is not weak politics, but enforces a necessary realism about what can be possible. So, in the hope that new faces can bring about new politics, and that the economic crisis can be tackled with maturity and responsibility, energy and vision, let's get the Lib Dems as many seats as we can.

17.3 Magazines

Economist 29/04/2010 Who should govern Britain

in this British election the overwhelming necessity of reforming the public sector stands out. ... The Conservatives, for all their shortcomings, are keenest to do that; and that is the main reason why we would cast our vote for them. Mr Cameron is much closer to answering the main question facing Britain than either of his rivals is. In this complicated, perhaps inevitably imperfect election, he would get our vote.

http://www.economist.com/opinion/displaystory.cfm?story_id=16007299

New Statesman 04/05/2010 All change please, the old order terminates here

A tactical vote on Thursday 6 May will help to prevent a Conservative victory. It will also, in this most volatile and unpredictable of elections, be a vote for the genuine change that, in its current state, Labour cannot deliver on its own. Consequently, in constituencies where the Lib Dems stand the best chance of defeating the Conservatives, voters should offer their support to Nick Clegg's party. And in those seats where Labour remains in first or second place, we encourage our readers to cast a positive vote for it. That way lies our best chance of seizing this progressive moment.

<http://www.newstatesman.com/uk-politics/2010/05/labour-liberal-progressive>

Spectator 07/04/2010 The case for Cameron

The sheer scale and variety of Labour's failures may impel voters to remove the party from office, but this reason to vote Tory is eclipsed by another, far more important one. And that is the case for David Cameron. ... Perhaps Mr Cameron's two greatest attributes are calmness in a crisis and versatility.

19 Technical notes, sources and abbreviations

19.1 Sources of data

The 2010 General Election results presented in this Research Paper are the official results as published by the Electoral Commission. Notional 2005 results have been provided by Colin Rallings and Michael Thrasher at the University of Plymouth. Other historical data are from House of Commons Library data files.

Data for minority ethnic candidates and MPs are from Operation Black Vote and the Labour Party.

19.2 Electorates and turnout

Turnout is calculated as valid votes cast as a percentage of the electorate. Spoilt ballots are not included in the calculations. This is the method used in all previous Library Research Papers and most other published sources.

19.3 New constituency boundaries in England, Wales and Northern Ireland

Constituency boundaries have been redrawn except in Scotland where they were last changed in 2005. As a result of the boundary review there are now 650 House of Commons seats, compared with 646 before the 2010 election.

19.4 By-elections, defections and the Speaker

Comparisons in this paper are with positions after General Elections rather than at the Dissolution of Parliament. For example, Norwich North, which was won (notionally) by Labour in 2005, by the Conservatives at a by-election in 2009, and by Conservatives in 2005, is considered a 'Conservative' gain.

The Speaker is considered separately and not assigned to a political party. His deputies, the Chairman and Deputy Chairmen of Ways and Means, stood for parties and are listed as such.

19.5 Thirsk and Malton

Following the death during the campaign of the UKIP candidate the election in Thirsk and Malton was postponed until 27 May 2010. Results for the constituency are included in the tables in this paper.

19.6 Party codes and colours

Each registered party has a denoted code of letters. Colours have been assigned to the major parties. Colours are not always used: for example, in some aggregations, parties other than Conservative, Labour and Liberal Democrat are combined in grey. The table below details party codes and colours used:
