Summary

A record 208 women MPs were elected to the House of Commons at General Election 2017, a record high of 32%. As of January 2018 there are 206 female peers, making up 26% of Members of the House of Lords. There are currently six women in Cabinet including the Prime Ministers, 26% of the total 23 permanent Cabinet posts.

Parliament

208 female MPs were elected during the 2017 General Election – a record high and 32% of all MPs. This is up from 191 in the 2015 election and the highest proportion of any UK election to date.¹ There are 206 female peers, making up 26% of Members of the House of Lords.²

Devolved Legislatures and UK MEPs

Just over one-third (36%) of members in the Scottish Parliament are women, compared to just over two-fifths (42%) of members of National Assembly for Wales and 30% of Members of the Northern Ireland Assembly. Following the 2014 European Parliament elections, 41% of UK MEPs are women.

Local Government councillors

32% of local authority councillors in England are women, as of 2013. In Scotland, 24% of councillors are women. Women hold 26% of council seats in Wales. In Northern Ireland 25% of councillors are women.

Women MPs since 1918

Since 1918, 489 women have been elected as Members of the House of Commons.³ In 1918 Constance Markievicz became the first women to be elected as an MP though, elected for Sinn Féin, she did not take her seat. Nancy Astor was the first women to take a seat in the House of Commons, in 1919. The total number of women to have been elected to the House since 1918 has now surpassed the current number of men sitting in the House of Commons, 442.

Women ministers

Currently there are six women in the Cabinet (including the Prime Minister) which is 26% of 23 Cabinet posts (not including those who “also attend Cabinet”).⁴

Margaret Bondfield was the first ever woman appointed to Cabinet, in 1929; Margaret Thatcher became the UK’s first woman Prime Minister in 1979, and Theresa May the second in 2016.

International comparisons

Globally, the UK’s 30% ratio for women in the House of Commons puts it 49th in ranked list. Rwanda is first, followed by Bolivia, Cuba and the Seychelles. Three countries in the ranking have no women in their lower or single house, while 31 have fewer than 10%.

Currently a woman holds the post of president or prime minister in 16 countries. This is 9% of the 193 countries who are currently members of the United Nations.

At 1 January 2017, 53 women presided over one of the 193 Houses of Parliament, 77 of which are bicameral, which means that women occupy 19.1% of the posts of Presiding Officers of Parliament or of one of its Houses.

2. Women MPs since 1918

489 women have been elected as Members of the House of Commons since 1918.⁷ Three of them were elected as Sinn Féin MPs and did not take their seats, Countess Constance Markievicz (1918), Michelle Gildernew (2001) and Elisha McCallion (2017).

Of the 489 women, 283 (58%) were first elected as Labour MPs and 140 (29%) Conservative.

Until 1997 women had never been more than 10% of all MPs, and until the late 1980s the proportion had always been below 5%. The proportion rose to 18% following the 1997 General Election when 120 women were elected. The highest ever proportion of women, 32%, elected at a General Election was in June 2017.

⁷ Includes women elected at General Elections and by-elections.

3. Women ministers

In July 2016, Theresa May became the second woman UK Prime Minister. Currently there are six women in the Cabinet (including the Prime Minister) which is 26% of 23 Cabinet posts.⁸ There are six Ministers who also attend the cabinet, four of whom are women.

Previously, in 2015, David Cameron appointed seven women to one of the 22 Cabinet Posts; this was 30% (of 22 Cabinet posts plus the PM). In addition there were eight Ministers who also attended cabinet, three of whom were women. In 2010, David Cameron's first Cabinet included four women.

Tony Blair's 1997 Cabinet had five women and was the first to include more than two female ministers at one time. The highest number of concurrent women Cabinet Ministers under New Labour was eight (36 per cent), from May 2006 – May 2007.

The table below shows the 45 women who have ever been appointed to Cabinet posts. Margaret Bondfield became the first ever woman appointed to the Cabinet in 1929, having previously become the first female minister (outside of Cabinet) in 1929.

5. Women General Election candidates

In the 2017 General Election 973 women candidates stood across all parties, 29% of all 3,304 candidates. Although this is the highest proportion on record, the number of women candidates was lower than at the 2015 General Election (1,033).

Labour had 256 women candidates, the highest number of any party at this or any other General Election. Women were 41% of Labour’s candidates, compared to 34% in 2015.

184 Conservative candidates, 29% of the party’s total cohort, were women – a 9% rise on 2015 and the highest number in the Party’s history. Similarly, 184 (29%) Liberal Democrats candidates were women.

35% of Green Party candidates were women, as were 34% of Scottish National Party candidates and 28% of Plaid Cymru candidates. Women comprised 13% of UKIP candidates. Women’s Equality Party fielded only female candidates at the 2017 General Election.

The chart below shows the balance of men and women candidates for each of the seats in the 2017 election by marginality to their party at the previous general election. This shows how seats “safe” and less “safe” were contested by men and women candidates.

Marginality is the difference in percentage vote share of the party’s candidate from the winning candidate – or, in seats won by the party, from the candidate in second place at the 2015 General Election.

A positive marginality means the party won the seat in 2015.

Seats with a negative marginality are those that party did not win in 2015 – a seat with marginality between -0% to -10% should be easier for that party to win than one where the marginality is between -20% to -30%.

Labour had a higher proportion of women candidates in safer seats. In seats with a 20% to 30% majority, 51% of Labour candidates were women compared with 26% of Conservative candidates.

The Conservatives, on the other hand, had 43% female candidates in the most winnable seats (those with a 0% to 10% majority to be overturned), compared with 33% of Labour candidates. This represents a fall for Labour and rise for the Conservatives compared with 2015, when the opposite was true.

Labour also had a higher proportion of women candidates in seats with the narrowest margin to hold. In seats with a 0% to 10% marginality, 47% of Labour candidates were women and 20% of Conservative candidates.

For the Liberal Democrats, the proportion of women was the highest in marginal seats (56%).

Historic background

The number of women candidates has risen at every general election since 1966 except in 2001, when there were 36 fewer women candidates than in 1997. At the 2017 General Election there were 60 fewer women than in 2015, but their proportion increased relative to men.

Women were first able to stand for Parliament in 1918, when there were 17 women candidates. This comprised one Conservative candidate, four Labour, four Liberal Democrat and eight other.

Women as a proportion of all candidates did not rise above 10% until 1979, when 11% of candidates were female. In 2005 women as a proportion of total candidates reached 20% for the first time.

6. Local Government

In 2013 (latest available data), 32% of local authority councillors in England were women.¹¹ In Scotland, 24% of councillors elected at the 2012 local government elections were women.¹² Women held 26% of council seats in Wales following the 2012 local elections.¹³ In Northern Ireland in 2014, 25% of councillors were women.¹⁴

The table below shows the number of local councillors by party and gender in England in 2013.

Historical background

Between 1869 and 1907 legislation was passed which extended the range of authorities to which women were eligible to stand for election.

The Municipal Franchise Act of 1869 extended the vote to women ratepayers in local elections and also enabled women to serve as Poor Law Guardians. The 1870 Education Act allowed for women ratepayers to stand as candidates to local school boards, the first contested election of which took place in Manchester on 24 November 1870.¹⁵

The Local Government Act 1894 allowed women to serve on parish and district councils, but it was not until the Qualification of Women (County and Town Councils) Act was passed in 1907 that women (ratepayers) were permitted to be members of County and Borough Councils.¹⁶ Three months after this Act was passed five women were elected to these bodies in England (Aldeburgh, Reading, Bewdley, Oxford and Oldham).¹⁷ One of the successful women was Elizabeth

¹⁶ The 1907 Act followed years of uncertainty and confusion, which included challenges in the courts when women first tried to stand for the LCC, women losing their influence on education matters when free-standing boards were absorbed into councils, and losing their places on Urban District Councils when towns grew and sought borough status.

In Scotland the Qualification of Women (County and Town Councils) (Scotland) Act was passed in August 1907. This allowed women to be elected as town and county councillors. Lavinia Malcolm was elected unopposed to the town and parish councils of Dollar (Clackmannanshire), the only woman in Scotland to be elected at that time.¹⁸

7. International context

As of October 2017 there are 18 women presidents or prime ministers in countries around the world and 50 women presided over 193 Houses of Parliament.

Data in this section is largely from the Inter Parliamentary Union, an organisation of Parliaments established in 1889.

7.1 Women Presidents and Prime Ministers

As of October 2017 a woman holds the post of president or prime minister in 18 countries. This is 9% of the 193 countries who are currently members of the United Nations.

7.2 Women Speakers of National Parliaments

At 1 October 2017, 50 women presided over one of the 193 Houses of Parliament, 77 of which are bicameral. Women therefore occupy 18.1% of the total number of 277 posts of Presiding Officers of Parliament or of one of its Houses.¹⁹

This is an increase from 45 women presiding officers in Parliaments at the start of 2015, but a decrease from 55 in mid-2017.

Historically, Austria was the only State to have elected a woman to the presidency of one of the Parliament's Chambers (the Bundesrat) before the Second World War. To date women have held one of those positions in 96 countries at least once.

Betty Boothroyd was the first woman Speaker of the House of Commons in the UK in 1992.

7.3 European Parliament

In May 2014, 37% of MEPs were women. The proportion varied from 67% in Malta to 9% for Lithuania. Two-fifths of the 73 UK MEPs elected in 2014 were women, so that the UK had the 10th highest ratio of the 28 EU Member following elections in May 2014.

7.4 Overseas Parliaments

Data from the Inter-Parliamentary Union shows the proportion of women in the lower (or single) House of different countries' legislatures following the most recent elections.

The UK is currently ranked 38th. Rwanda is first, followed by Bolivia, Cuba and Iceland. Five countries in the ranking have no women in their lower or single house, while 30 have fewer than 10%.

About the Library

The House of Commons Library research service provides MPs and their staff with the impartial briefing and evidence base they need to do their work in scrutinising Government, proposing legislation, and supporting constituents.

As well as providing MPs with a confidential service we publish open briefing papers, which are available on the Parliament website.

Every effort is made to ensure that the information contained in these publically available research briefings is correct at the time of publication. Readers should be aware however that briefings are not necessarily updated or otherwise amended to reflect subsequent changes.

If you have any comments on our briefings please email papers@parliament.uk. Authors are available to discuss the content of this briefing only with Members and their staff.

If you have any general questions about the work of the House of Commons you can email hcinfo@parliament.uk.
