Registration of stillbirth

Summary

1 Registration of live births
2 Registration of stillbirth
3 Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration etc) Act 2019
4 Pregnancy loss review
5 Other calls for change
Image Credits
Attribution:  Flower and hands – no copyright required / image cropped

Disclaimer
The Commons Library does not intend the information in our research publications and briefings to address the specific circumstances of any particular individual. We have published it to support the work of MPs. You should not rely upon it as legal or professional advice, or as a substitute for it. We do not accept any liability whatsoever for any errors, omissions or misstatements contained herein. You should consult a suitably qualified professional if you require specific advice or information. Read our briefing ‘Legal help: where to go and how to pay’ for further information about sources of legal advice and help. This information is provided subject to the conditions of the Open Parliament Licence.

Feedback
Every effort is made to ensure that the information contained in these publicly available briefings is correct at the time of publication. Readers should be aware however that briefings are not necessarily updated to reflect subsequent changes.

If you have any comments on our briefings please email papers@parliament.uk. Please note that authors are not always able to engage in discussions with members of the public who express opinions about the content of our research, although we will carefully consider and correct any factual errors.

You can read our feedback and complaints policy and our editorial policy at commonslibrary.parliament.uk. If you have general questions about the work of the House of Commons email hcenquiries@parliament.uk.
Contents

Summary 4

1 Registration of live births 6

2 Registration of stillbirth 7

2.1 Definition of “stillborn child” 7

2.2 Registration of stillbirth after 24 weeks of pregnancy 7

2.3 No registration of stillbirth before 24 weeks of pregnancy 8

2.4 Guidance 8

3 Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration etc) Act 20199

3.1 The Act 9

3.2 Debate on the Bill 9

3.3 Parliamentary question 11

4 Pregnancy loss review 13

4.1 The Pregnancy Loss Review 13

4.2 Progress of the Review 13

5 Other calls for change 14

5.1 Private Member’s Bill 14

5.2 Parliamentary debate 14

5.3 Petitions 15

5.4 The Government’s position 16
Summary

This briefing paper deals with the position in England and Wales unless otherwise specifically stated.

Registration of birth and subsequent death of baby born alive

The birth of a baby who is born alive must be registered, whatever the length of the completed pregnancy. The death of a baby born alive must be registered in the same way as any other death.

Registration of stillbirth after 24 weeks of pregnancy

When a baby is stillborn (born dead) after 24 weeks of pregnancy, the stillbirth must be registered in the stillbirth register. The process for registering a stillbirth combines features of both birth and death registration.

Stillbirth before 24th week of pregnancy

There is no provision to allow the registration of stillbirths before the 24th week of pregnancy. Hospitals may issue a commemorative certificate when the stillbirth cannot be registered formally.

Calls for change

For some time, calls have been made, both inside and outside of Parliament, for the law to be changed. Tim Loughton (Conservative) has spoken of the arbitrary nature of the 24-week threshold. He highlighted one case where twins had been stillborn either side of the threshold and were treated differently for registration purposes.

The Government has said it does not plan to change the definition of stillbirth, which is based on clinical evidence and the age of viability.

Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration etc) Act 2019

Section 3 of the Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration etc) Act 2019 requires the Secretary of State to arrange a report on whether, and if so, how, the law should be changed to deal with the registration of pregnancy losses which cannot be registered as stillbirths under the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953. The Secretary of State must publish the report prepared under this section.

This Act started as a Private Member’s Bill introduced by Tim Loughton.

The Pregnancy Loss Review

In March 2018, the Department of Health and Social Care established the Pregnancy Loss Review. The purpose of the Review is to consider:

- The impact on families of the current threshold of 24 weeks gestation before being able, formally, to register a miscarriage if they so wish.

- Whether it would, on balance, be beneficial to look at legislative options to amend existing primary legislation to allow parents to register a miscarriage if they so wish.

- Options to improve NHS gynaecology and maternity care practice for parents who experience a miscarriage and other causes of baby loss.

In March 2021, the Government said it expects the report of the Review to be published in 2021.
1 Registration of live births

The birth of a baby who is born alive must be registered, whatever the length of the completed pregnancy.

If a baby lives for even a short time after being born, and then dies, both the birth and death must be registered.1

A neonatal death generally means a death within the first 28 days of life. This is distinguished from a stillbirth, where there are no signs of independent existence.

1 Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953
2 Registration of stillbirth

2.1 Definition of “stillborn child”

The definition of “still-born child” in England and Wales is contained in section 41 of the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953 (as amended) and is as follows:

a child which has issued forth from its mother after the twenty-fourth week of pregnancy and which did not at any time after being completely expelled from its mother breathe or show any other signs of life, and the expression “still–birth” shall be construed accordingly.²

Until 1992, the threshold was 28 weeks.

Similar definitions apply in Scotland³ and Northern Ireland.⁴

2.2 Registration of stillbirth after 24 weeks of pregnancy

When a baby is stillborn (born dead) after 24 weeks pregnancy, the stillbirth must be registered in the stillbirth register. The process for registering a stillbirth combines features of both birth and death registration.

Information about how to register a stillbirth is available on the following websites:

- Gov.UK, Register a stillbirth (England and Wales);
- National Records of Scotland, Registering a stillbirth (Scotland);
- NIDirect, Registering a stillbirth (Northern Ireland).⁵

² As amended by the Stillbirth (Definition) Act 1992 section 1(1)
³ Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965, section 56(1), as amended by the Stillbirth (Definition) Act 1992 section 1(2)
⁴ Births and Deaths Registration (Northern Ireland) Order 1976, Article 2 as amended by the Stillbirth (Definition) (Northern Ireland Order) 1992
⁵ Links accessed 20 September 2021
2.3 No registration of stillbirth before 24 weeks of pregnancy

There is no provision to allow the registration of stillbirths before the 24th week of pregnancy.

Hospitals may issue a commemorative certificate when the stillbirth cannot be registered formally.

2.4 Guidance

The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists’ good practice note, Registration of stillbirths and certification for pregnancy loss before 24 weeks of gestation, includes a statement on the interpretation and implementation of registration law:

…the legal advisors for the Department of Health and the Office for National Statistics have agreed that a fetus that is expelled after 24 weeks of pregnancy, provided it was no longer alive at the 24th week of pregnancy (this fact being either known or provable from the stage of development reached by the dead fetus), does not fall within the category of births to be registered as stillbirths under the above Acts. This interpretation is also accepted by the General Register Office for Scotland and the General Register Office for Northern Ireland.

The Practice Note also includes a number of questions and answers.

---

6 Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, Registration of stillbirths and certification for pregnancy loss before 24 weeks of gestation, Good Practice No 4, January 2005
3 Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration etc) Act 2019

3.1 The Act

Section 3 of the Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration etc) Act 2019 (the Act) provides for a report on registration of pregnancy loss:

The Secretary of State must make arrangements for the preparation of a report on whether, and if so how, the law ought to be changed to require or permit the registration of pregnancy losses which cannot be registered as still-births under the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953.

The Secretary of State must publish the report prepared under this section.

3.2 Debate on the Bill

The Act started as a Private Member’s Bill introduced by Tim Loughton (Conservative), who came fifth in the Private Members’ Bill ballot which took place in June 2017. In July 2017, he introduced the Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration Etc.) Bill 2017-19 (the Bill). Information about the Bill is provided on the Bill page on the Parliament website.

Another Library briefing paper provides further information:

Commons Library analysis: Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration Etc.) Bill (CPB 08217).

Second reading

At Second Reading, Tim Loughton set out the purpose of Clause 3:

The Bill will simply require the Government to hold a review of how we can do better and come up with a simple scheme that could have a huge impact on many grieving parents. It has nothing to do with changing the law on abortion, and that debate is for another day and another piece of legislation. I have deliberately not been prescriptive about what form the review should take, but I trust the

7 HC Deb 19 July 2017 c875
Government to do the right thing here and I think we are pushing at an open door.\(^8\)

Karen Lee, who was then Shadow Home Office Minister, said, “We agree that stillbirths that occur before 24 weeks should be formally acknowledged and registered, but by no means would we want to see such a measure used to undermine abortion rights and a woman’s right to choose”.\(^9\)

Victoria Atkins, who was then a junior Home Office Minister, acknowledged the range of views on the subject, and welcomed the proposed review:

Currently, parents whose babies are stillborn after 24 weeks’ gestation can register the baby’s name and receive a certificate of registration of stillbirth. When a pregnancy ends before 24 weeks’ gestation, however, there is currently no formal process for parents to be able to register their loss legally. Some expectant parents find this to be not just distressing but devastating. The Department of Health and Social Care recognises the need to do more to support families affected by a miscarriage. Some families may want their loss to be acknowledged and registered. Others, however, may feel distressed at any mandatory requirement to do so in the circumstances of their grief. This issue must therefore be approached with great care and sensitivity.

Accordingly, I am pleased that clause 3 will provide for the Government to review this issue and to look at whether current law on registration of stillbirths should be changed to allow for the registration of pregnancy loss before 24 weeks’ gestation. As part of this review, we will seek views and evidence from all interested parties. I hope that colleagues across the House will contribute to that review.\(^10\)

Public Bill Committee

In Public Bill Committee, Tim Loughton expressed some reservations about the focus of the review which had been started by the Government,\(^11\) and reiterated the purpose of the Bill:

I am very clear that we need to do something specifically for women who have given birth but it happens to be before 24 weeks. We probably need to do more for the many more women who have had pregnancy loss through miscarriage, at whatever stage. I know that other measures are being looked at...but I am focusing on the experiences of women who have given birth to children who, alas, are not alive when they are born. That is a different experience. Having a baby loss at any stage is hugely traumatic. I am not in any

---

\(^8\) HC Deb 2 February 2018 c1108
\(^9\) HC Deb 2 February 2018 c1115
\(^10\) HC Deb 2 February 2018 cc1123-4
\(^11\) See the next section of this briefing paper way trying to undermine the tragedy of everybody’s loss. The problem here is that, simply because of the way the law is figured and the chronology, which is part of the law, many children who would otherwise have been registered and acknowledged do not exist in the eyes of the state.

Victoria Atkins confirmed the Government’s support for a report on the issue of registration:

Registration and certification can be an important part of acknowledging a pregnancy loss, and that is why the Government fully support the need to look into the issue more closely.

(...)

We support the requirement in this clause that a report is prepared before we consider any changes, because of the obvious sensitivities involved. In conducting this review, the Government are engaging closely with health practitioners, registrars and charities. Most importantly, the review is speaking to parents who have lost a baby before 24 weeks, to learn about their experiences and how to ensure that they receive the best care and support possible when such a tragedy takes place.

Tim Loughton hoped that Government action would follow the proposed report:

The clause only commits to having a report at this stage, but there is an expectation that the Government will want to turn that report into legislative change — into action — to complement the good work that is going on to prevent anybody from being in the iniquitous position of realising that their child is not officially recognised by the state, by substantially reducing the number of stillbirths and miscarriages.

3.3 Parliamentary question

In April 2021, Lord Bethell, who was then a junior Minister at the Department of Health and Social Care, gave the following update in answer to a parliamentary question:

Baroness Hodgson of Abinger:

To ask Her Majesty’s Government whether they conducted a consultation to inform their actions pursuant to section 3 of the Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration etc.) Act 2019; and if so, what the outcome of the consultation was.

Lord Bethell:

The Government has not conducted a consultation to inform actions pursuant to section 3 of the Civil Partnerships, Marriages and Deaths (Registration etc.) Act 2019. The Pregnancy Loss Review team has been speaking with women and men with lived experience of pregnancy loss, clinicians, nurses, bereavement midwives, registrars, faith leaders, charities and officials in the United Kingdom and other countries, drawing on other methods for gathering evidence.15

---

15 HLPO 14441 [on Miscarriage: Registration of Births, Deaths, Marriages and Civil Partnerships], 7 April 2021
4 Pregnancy loss review

4.1 The Pregnancy Loss Review

In March 2018, the Department of Health and Social Care established the Pregnancy Loss Review. The terms of reference of the Review are available on the Gov.UK website:

The purpose of the Review is to consider:

- The impact on families of the current threshold of 24 weeks’ gestation before being able, formally, to register a miscarriage if they so wish.
- Whether it would, on balance, be beneficial to look at legislative options to amend existing primary legislation to allow parents to register a miscarriage if they so wish.
- Options to improve NHS gynaecology and maternity care practice for parents who experience a miscarriage and other causes of baby loss.

4.2 Progress of the Review

In March 2021, in answer to a written parliamentary question, the Government said the Pregnancy Loss Review Advisory Panel last met on 24 October 2018 and, “The report is expected to be published in 2021”. The Government had previously indicated that work on the review was delayed during the Covid-19 pandemic.

---

17 March 2018
19 PQ 164336 [on Pregnancy Loss Review Group], 12 March 2021
20 PQ 114746 [on Perinatal Mortality: Registration], 24 November 2020
5 Other calls for change

For some time, calls have been made, both inside and outside of Parliament, for a change in the law relating to the registration of stillbirth before the threshold of 24 weeks gestation.

5.1 Private Member’s Bill

On 1 July 2021, Baroness Benjamin (Liberal Democrat) introduced a Private Member’s Bill, Certificate of Loss Bill [HL].\(^{21}\) This Bill has the following long title:

A Bill to make provision for a certificate to be issued to mothers in respect of miscarried and still-born children not eligible for registration under the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953; to establish a database for archiving the certificate and recording information about the miscarriage or still-birth; and for connected purposes.

A date has not yet been set for Second Reading.

5.2 Parliamentary debate

Tim Loughton raised the issue on several previous occasions, including:

- In January 2014, he introduced a Private Members’ Bill under the Ten Minute Rule, the Registration of Stillbirths Bill 2013-14.\(^{22}\) At First Reading on 14 January 2014, Tim Loughton said the definition of stillbirth would be based on the experience of giving birth:

  My Bill would provide for the official registration of stillborn babies below 24 weeks’ gestation. It would not be based on a crude time threshold of what is deemed a viable foetus, but on the experience of giving birth.\(^{23}\)

  This Bill did not proceed any further.

\(^{21}\) HL Bill 39
\(^{22}\) Bill 153 of 2013-14
\(^{23}\) HC Deb 14 January 2014 c728
• On 13 October 2016, in a debate on Baby Loss, Mr Loughton spoke of the arbitrary nature of the 24-week threshold:

If someone happens to give birth to a stillborn child after 23 weeks, six days and 23 hours, that child never existed in the eyes of the state and is to all intents and purposes a miscarriage. If that child had clung on for another couple of hours and been stillborn beyond the 24-week threshold, it would be a child in the eyes of the state. That is an extraordinary anomaly in the law which we need to address.24

Tim Loughton highlighted one case where twins had been stillborn and were treated differently for registration purposes:

...a woman ... had twins, one of whom was stillborn before 24 weeks. The other survived and was tragically born stillborn after 24 weeks, but in the eyes of the law she only had one baby. How absurd is that? That is why the law needs to be changed.

That stark difference surely cannot be right. It adds insult to the unimaginable pain that the parents have already had to suffer.25

5.3 Petitions

There have been several petitions on the issue, including, for example:

Change.org
• Allow registered birth certificates for children born from 20 weeks – received 371,143 signatures.

UK Government and Parliament Petitions
• Amend the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953 to include all pregnancy loss - petition closed early on 3 May 2017, because of General Election, with 10,850 signatures.

24 HC Deb 13 October 2016 c505
25 HC Deb 13 October 2016 c506
5.4 The Government’s position

In February 2017, the Government said it did not plan to change the definition of stillbirth, because medical opinion did not support reducing the age of viability below 24 weeks of gestation, on which the definition is based.26

In March 2020, the Government again confirmed that it had no plans to change the definition of stillbirth to include pregnancy losses before 24 weeks’ gestation.27

---

26 PQ 62995 [on Childbirth], 10 February 2017
27 PQ24351 [on Perinatal Mortality], 4 March 2020
The House of Commons Library is a research and information service based in the UK Parliament. Our impartial analysis, statistical research and resources help MPs and their staff scrutinise legislation, develop policy, and support constituents.

Our published material is available to everyone on commonslibrary.parliament.uk.

Get our latest research delivered straight to your inbox. Subscribe at commonslibrary.parliament.uk/subscribe or scan the code below:

commonslibrary.parliament.uk

@commonslibrary