The retention and disclosure of criminal records

Inside:
1. Retention and deletion
2. Disclosure and Barring Service checks
3. The disclosure of non-conviction information
4. The disclosure of old and/or minor conviction information
5. Calls for review and reform of disclosure

By Jacqueline Beard
Contents

Summary 3

1. Retention and deletion 5
   1.1 Nominal records on the Police National Computer 5
       Record deletion process 5
   1.2 Intelligence on the Police National Database 6

2. Disclosure and Barring Service checks 8
   2.1 “Spent” convictions and “excepted positions” 8
   2.2 Types of check 8

3. The disclosure of non-conviction information 9
   3.1 Background 9
   3.2 The Home Office Review and the Protection of Freedoms Act 2012 10
   3.3 Police guidance 11

4. The disclosure of old and/or minor conviction information 14
   4.1 The Home Office Review 14
   4.2 Court of Appeal ruling- January 2013 16
   4.3 Supreme Court ruling- June 2014 17
   4.4 The introduction of the filtering rules 17
   4.5 Supreme Court ruling- January 2019 18
   4.6 Changes to the filtering rules 19

5. Calls for review and reform of disclosure 21
   5.1 Government policy 23
Summary

Information held by the police

Criminal records information is held on two main systems. The first is the Police National Computer (PNC), which records details of convictions, cautions, reprimands, warnings and arrests. The second is the Police National Database (PND), which records “soft” local police intelligence, for example details of investigations that did not lead to any further action.

Chief constables “own” the data that their force has entered on to the PNC. They can exercise their discretion, in exceptional circumstances, to delete non-court disposals (e.g. cautions) which are owned by them and held on the PNC as well as any non-conviction outcome. Individuals can, in some circumstances, apply for the removal of a record from the PNC.

Criminal records checks

Cautions, reprimands and warnings and some convictions become “spent” after a certain period of time. Once a record becomes spent it does not usually need to be declared to employers or voluntary organisations. When a person applies for a so-called “excepted position”, they may be required to provide details of their criminal record, both spent and unspent, by way of a standard or enhanced criminal records check from the Disclosure and Barring Service. Excepted positions cover, for example, work with children or vulnerable adults or roles in certain licensed occupations or positions of trust.

The information in this briefing about disclosure relates to England and Wales. For information about Scotland see Disclosure Scotland and for information regarding Northern Ireland see AccessNI.

A standard check contains details of all spent and unspent convictions, cautions, reprimands and final warnings (as held on the PNC) except those which, under the filtering rules, should no longer be disclosed (see below). An enhanced check includes the same information as a standard check together with details of relevant and proportionate non-conviction information, for example details of arrests recorded on the PNC or police intelligence recorded on the PND. Disclosure of such information is not automatic but is done on a case-by-case basis following the exercise of police discretion.

The disclosure of non-conviction information and old and minor convictions

There has been some debate over two particular issues relating to criminal records checks: the disclosure of non-conviction information and the disclosure of old and minor convictions.

The Government legislated, via the Protection of Freedoms Act 2012, to introduce new safeguards relating to the disclosure of non-conviction information, such as a new independent disputes process.

Legislation introducing a new filtering mechanism to restrict the disclosure of old and minor convictions came into force in May 2013. This followed a Court of Appeal ruling in January 2013 that the mandatory and blanket disclosure of convictions as part of a criminal records check was incompatible with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights (right to respect for private life).

A judgment of the Supreme Court in January 2019 said that two specific aspects of the filtering mechanism, concerning multiple convictions and the disclosure of warnings and reprimands received by children, were disproportionate and therefore incompatible with Article 8. The Government amended the filtering rules in November 2020 to remove the automatic disclosure of youth cautions, reprimands and warnings and the ‘multiple conviction’ rule.

Calls for wider reform of disclosure

There have been calls for wider reform of criminal records disclosure, including from the Law Commission, the Justice Committee, Charlie Taylor in his review of youth justice and David Lammy in his review into the treatment of and outcomes for BAME individuals in the criminal justice system.

The Government in its September 2020 White Paper, A Smarter Approach to Sentencing, said that it wanted to “go further on criminal records disclosure to support those who offended in the past to move on with their lives and in particular to improve access to employment for those with criminal records”. In addition to the changes to the filtering rules, the Government proposed changes to the rehabilitation periods that govern the length of time before a conviction becomes “spent”.
1. Retention and deletion

Criminal records information is held on two main systems. The first is the Police National Computer, which records details of convictions, cautions, reprimands, warnings and arrests. The second is the Police National Database, which records “soft” local police intelligence for example details of investigations that did not lead to any further action.

1.1 Nominal records on the Police National Computer

An individual who is convicted of a recordable offence will have a “nominal record” of that conviction placed on the Police National Computer (PNC). Nominal records will also be created for individuals who are cautioned, reprimanded, warned or arrested for such offences. An individual’s nominal record is retained until their 100th birthday.

Record deletion process

Chief constables “own” the data that their force has entered on to the PNC. They can exercise their discretion, in exceptional circumstances, to delete non-court disposals (e.g. cautions) which are owned by them and held on the PNC as well as any non-conviction outcome.

The National Police Chiefs’ Council (NPCC) has issued guidance on the Record Deletion Process. This guidance applies to the deletion of DNA profiles, DNA samples, fingerprints and PNC records. Its purpose is to ensure that a consistent approach is taken by relevant Chief Officers when exercising their discretion in dealing with applications for the deletion of records from national police systems.

Annex B says that there is no set criterion for the deletion of records and that it is for Chief Officers to exercise professional judgement based on the information available. Annex B gives examples of circumstances in which deletion should be considered by a Chief Officer. These include:

- No Crime. Where it is established that a recordable crime has not been committed. For example, a sudden death where an individual is arrested at the scene and subsequently charged, but after post mortem it is determined that the deceased person died of natural causes and not as a result of homicide.
- Malicious/False Allegation. Where the case against an individual has been withdrawn at any stage, and there is corroborative evidence that the case was based on a malicious or false allegation.

---

1 The NPCC was formed on 1 April 2015 and replaced the Association of Chief Police Officers
2 NPCC, Deletion of Records from National Policing Systems, Version 2.0, 2018
3 The guidance has replaced the ‘Exceptional Case Procedure’ as defined in the ‘ACPO Retention Guidelines for Nominal Records on the Police National Computer’. The Retention Guidelines came into force in March 2006 as part of the Government’s response to the Bichard Inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the Soham murders
• Proven Alibi. Where there is corroborative evidence that the individual has a proven alibi and as a result s/he is eliminated from the enquiry after being arrested.

• Suspect status not clear at the time of arrest. Where an individual is arrested at the outset of an enquiry, the distinction between the offender, victim and witness is not clear, and the individual is subsequently eliminated as a suspect (but may be a witness or victim).

Individuals can apply for the removal of a record from the PNC using a form available on the NPCC website. The form must be completed and sent (with proof of identity and any documentation to support the application) to the National Records Deletion Unit. The application will then be sent on to the relevant Chief Officer for a decision.

Note that individuals with a court conviction cannot apply to have their records deleted under the records deletion process. Neither can an individual apply where an investigation into them, or court proceedings against them, remain ongoing. See the ACRO Criminal Records Office page Deletion of records from national police systems for guidance.

1.2 Intelligence on the Police National Database

Operating alongside the PNC is the Police National Database (PND). While the police use the PNC to record convictions, cautions, reprimands, warnings and arrests, they use the PND to record “soft” local intelligence such as details of allegations or police investigations that did not lead to arrest or charge.

The review, retention and disposal of police information, including that on the PND, is governed by the Accredited Professional Practice (APP) – Information Management issued by the College of Policing, which states:

> The purposes of review, retention and disposal procedures for crime or offence-related police information is to:

• protect the public and help manage the risks posed by known offenders and other potentially dangerous individuals

• ensure compliance with the relevant legislation.

The review of crime or offence-related police information is central to risk-based decision making, public protection and legal compliance. Records must be regularly reviewed to ensure that they remain necessary for a policing purpose, are accurate, adequate and up to date, and are kept for no longer than is necessary.

---

4 Annex B
5 Until May 2010 local intelligence was held by individual police forces on their own systems. On the recommendation of the Bichard Inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the Soham murders, the PND was introduced to act as a central repository for this intelligence in order to enable better sharing of information between police forces.
6 College of Policing, APP: Management of police information, Retention, review and disposal.
Police information is divided into three groups based on an assessment of the risk posed by the person to whom the intelligence relates. Scheduled reviews take place at intervals specified for each group.

Group 1 intelligence is information relating to any of the following:

- offenders who have ever been managed under multi agency public protection arrangements (MAPPA);
- individuals who have been convicted, acquitted, charged, arrested, questioned or implicated in relation to murder or a “serious offence” as defined in the Criminal Justice Act 2003;
- potentially dangerous people.

Intelligence within this category should be retained until the individual it relates to is deemed to have reached 100 years of age. It should be reviewed every ten years to ensure it is adequate and up to date.

Group 2 is information relating to other sexual, violent or serious offences not covered by Group 1. Once the individual to whom the intelligence relates has completed a ten-year “clear period” the police will review the intelligence and assess whether the individual continues to pose a risk of harm.\(^9\) If they do not, the intelligence should be disposed of. If they does, then the intelligence should be retained for a further ten-year clear period. The same review exercise should then take place on the expiry of this and every other subsequent ten-year clear period.

Group 3 intelligence is information relating to individuals who are convicted, acquitted, charged, arrested, questioned or implicated for offending behaviour that does not fall within Groups 1 or 2. Such intelligence will be retained for an initial six-year clear period. The police may then either delete the record or, if they wish to retain it, carry out a review and risk assessment every five years.

Information relating to undetected crime with no named suspects will be retained in line with the relevant group based on offence type. Information relating to an undetected Group 1 offence should be retained for 100 years from the date it was reported to police. Information relating to other undetected offences should be retained for a minimum of six years.

---

\(^7\) The Criminal Justice Act 2003 requires local criminal justice agencies working in partnership to make arrangements to assess and manage the risk posed by sexual and violent offenders in their area. These arrangements are known as Multi-Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA).

\(^8\) A “serious offence” is an offence listed in Schedule 15 to the 2003 Act that is punishable either with life imprisonment or with a determinate sentence of ten years or more. Examples include wounding with intent to cause grievous bodily harm, robbery, arson, possessing a firearm with intent to endanger life or cause fear of violence, rape, and sexual assault.

\(^9\) For these purposes, a “clear period” is the length of time since a person last came to the attention of the police as an offender or suspected offender for behaviour that can be considered a relevant risk factor. Further behaviour brought to the attention of the police and that indicates a relevant risk of harm will reset an individual’s clear period, as will a request for information made by other law enforcement agencies and requests for a criminal records check.
2. Disclosure and Barring Service checks

2.1 “Spent” convictions and “excepted positions”

Under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, convictions, reprimands and warnings become “spent” after a certain period of time. Once a record becomes spent it does not usually need to be declared to employers or voluntary organisations.

However, if a person applies for a so-called “excepted position”, then the prospective employer is entitled to ask for details of both spent and unspent convictions, cautions, reprimands and warnings by way of a criminal records check conducted by the Disclosure and Barring Service (DBS). Excepted positions cover, for example, work with children or vulnerable adults or roles in certain licensed occupations or positions of trust such as police officers or solicitors. The DBS has published eligibility guidance employers can use to decide whether a role is eligible for a DBS check and which type.

2.2 Types of check

Four types of check are issued by the DBS:

- A basic check only shows unspent convictions, cautions, reprimands and warnings.
- A standard check contains details of all spent and unspent convictions, cautions, reprimands and final warnings (as held on the PNC) except those which, under the “filtering rules”, should no longer be disclosed (see section 4.4 of this briefing).
- An enhanced check includes the same information as a standard check together with local police intelligence.
- An enhanced with barred list check includes the same information as an enhanced check together with details of whether the individual concerned is on the lists maintained by the DBS of those barred from working with children and/or vulnerable adults.

The two types of enhanced check provide details of relevant and proportionate non-conviction information, for example details of arrests recorded on the PNC or police intelligence recorded on the PND. Disclosure of such information is not automatic but is done on a case-by-case basis following the exercise of police discretion.

---

10 Other than convictions resulting in a prison sentence of more than four years, which are currently excluded from the scope of the 1974 Act and can therefore never become spent.
11 For further information see Library Briefing The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, CBP1841.
12 The DBS was formed on 1 December 2012 by the merger of the Criminal Records Bureau, which previously had responsibility for issuing criminal records checks, and the Independent Safeguarding Authority. See DBS website, What we do.
13 Gov.uk, DBS checks: guidance for employers.
3. The disclosure of non-conviction information

3.1 Background

The disclosure of non-conviction information has proved controversial in some cases, and there have been a number of judicial review challenges to the inclusion of non-conviction information on enhanced checks.

Until October 2009, the leading case on the disclosure of police information in connection with an enhanced check was R (on the application of X) v Chief Constable of the West Midlands Police and another [2005] 1 All ER 610, in which the Court of Appeal held that the policy of the relevant legislation, in order to serve the pressing social need to protect children and vulnerable adults, was that the information should be disclosed to the Criminal Records Bureau by the police even if it only “might” be true.

However, in October 2009 the Supreme Court ruled that equal weight should be given to the human rights of the person applying for the enhanced disclosure as to the need to protect children and vulnerable adults: following R (X) v Chief Constable of the West Midlands Police the balance had tipped too far against the applicant. The Supreme Court held that all enhanced disclosures are likely to engage Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights (right to respect for private life), as the information has been collected and stored in police records and disclosure of relevant information is likely to diminish the applicant’s employment prospects. The police should consider two questions when deciding whether to disclose non-conviction information: first, whether the information is reliable and relevant; and second, in light of the public interest and the likely impact on the applicant, whether it is proportionate to disclose the information. Factors to be considered in assessing proportionality include:

- the gravity of the information;
- its reliability and relevance;
- the applicant’s opportunity to rebut the information;
- the period that has elapsed since the relevant events; and
- the adverse effect of the disclosure.

If the chief constable is not satisfied that the applicant has had a fair opportunity to answer any allegations in the information concerned, or if the information is historical or vague or he or she has doubts as to its potential relevance, the applicant should be given the chance to make representations as to why it should not be included.

---

14 R (L) v Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis [2009] UKSC 3. The Supreme Court has also published a press summary of the decision, which provides an overview of the key issues set out in the judgment.
3.2 The Home Office Review and the Protection of Freedoms Act 2012

In 2009, the then Home Secretary Alan Johnson asked Sunita Mason, the newly-appointed Independent Adviser for Criminality Information Management, to review the retention of criminal record information with a view to formulating a “clear, principled approach”. The outcome of the review was published on 18 March 2010.15 One of her recommendations was that the Government review the disclosure of non-conviction information to see whether a more “balanced” approach could be taken.16

Following the 2010 general election, the Government said that it would “review the criminal records and vetting and barring regime and scale it back to common sense levels”.17 The review was again conducted by Sunita Mason. Ms Mason’s report on phase 1 of her review was published on 11 February 2011.18 She covered a range of issues, the key ones being the filtering of old or minor conviction information (discussed further in section 4.1 of this briefing) and the disclosure of non-conviction information.

Ms Mason made a number of recommendations aimed at a more restricted approach to disclosing non-conviction information as part of an enhanced criminal records check.

The first was that the statutory test for the police to use when deciding whether to disclose non-conviction information should be made more strict. At the time of Ms Mason’s review, section 113B(4) of the Police Act 1997 required the police only to form the opinion that the information “might” be relevant before it should be disclosed.19 She suggested that this be replaced with a requirement for the police to “reasonably believe” that the information is relevant.20

She also recommended the introduction of a new statutory code of practice for the police to follow when deciding whether to disclose non-conviction information, in order to generate “consistency and proportionality across police forces”.21 She suggested that the code should include a requirement to justify the following:

- the decision to include non-conviction information on an enhanced certificate;
- the risk that might be posed;
- the source of the information (if relevant); and
- the potential impact of disclosure on the individual the check related to.

---

16 Ibid, p9 and pp25-26
17 Cabinet Office, The Coalition: our programme for government, May 2010, p20
19 Police Act 1997, s113B(4)
20 Sunita Mason, A Common Sense Approach – Report on Phase 1, February 2011, p33
21 Ibid, p34
Another recommendation was for the Government to develop an “open and transparent representations process for individuals to challenge inaccurate or inappropriate disclosures”. She said that representations should be overseen by an independent expert, rather than by the police force that took the initial decision to disclose.22

The Government implemented Ms Mason’s recommendations relating to a new test for disclosure, a new statutory code and a new independent disputes process in section 82 of the *Protection of Freedoms Act 2012.*23

Under section 113B(4) of the Police Act 1997, as amended by the Protection of Freedoms Act 2012, the test the police use when deciding whether to disclose non-conviction information is whether the chief officer “reasonably believes it to be relevant” for the purpose of the check and whether in their opinion it ought to be included.

The Statutory Disclosure Guidance,24 issued by the Home Office, sets out the principles chief officers should apply in deciding what, if any, information should be provided for inclusion in an enhanced check.

Details of the disputes process are provided on the Gov.uk page, Report a problem about a criminal record check or barring decision.

3.3 Police guidance

A Quality Assurance Framework (QAF) issued jointly by the DBS and the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO)25 sets out more detailed guidance for the police to follow when deciding whether to disclose intelligence as part of an enhanced criminal records check.

An overview of the structure and function of the QAF is set out in Quality Assurance Framework: An applicant’s introduction to the decision-making process for Enhanced Criminal Record Checks (Standards and Compliance Unit, March 2014). The QAF sets out the following general approach:

> The role of police is to identify information that might be relevant to an employer’s assessment of applicant suitability and to determine whether it ought to be disclosed (having considered the potential impact upon the private lives of those concerned, if considering disclosure as Approved Information)

> You are required to consider the gravity of the material involved, the reliability of the information on which it is based, the period that has elapsed since the relevant events occurred and the relevance of the material to the application in question.

> Whatever information you determine to be relevant, you should also consider whether you need to offer Representations in order to satisfy yourself that your conclusions are not based on

---

22 Ibid, pp41-2
23 The Protection of Freedoms Act 2012 (Commencement No. 3) Order 2012, SI 2012/2234
   Section 82 came into force on 10 September 2012
24 Second edition, August 2015
25 Now replaced by the National Police Chiefs’ Council (NPCC) inaccurate/incomplete information or on a false premise or a state of affairs which is out of date – information that should no longer be considered a factor in your deliberations or that should be viewed in a different light.

These considerations should help you arrive at a conclusion of whether or not a reasonable employer, when considering the employment of an applicant, would find the information material to that decision.\(^{26}\)

The QAF also sets out the circumstances in which the police should offer the individual who has applied for the check the opportunity to make representations about the disclosure of non-conviction information. It suggests the presence of any of the following factors should require the police to consider whether representations might be appropriate:

- If it is unclear whether the position for which the applicant is applying really does require the disclosure of such information
- Where the information may indicate a state of affairs that is out of date or no longer true
- If the applicant has never had a fair opportunity to answer the allegation
- If the applicant appears unaware of the information being considered for disclosure
- If the facts are not clear and are in dispute.\(^{27}\)

Circumstances where representations may not be needed include where the information relates to an impending prosecution or provides background to a conviction on the PNC.\(^{28}\)

If the police decide that it is appropriate to offer the applicant the opportunity to make representations, they will contact them directly to inform them of this. Any representations made by the applicant are then added to the information held by the police and become a factor in their decision-making: “They may decide not to disclose some, or all, of the information as a result, or re-word the disclosure text itself to make it, for instance, more balanced, accurate and fair”.\(^{29}\)

If, having followed the procedure in the QAF, the police decide to disclose any non-conviction information as part of an enhanced check, it is open to the applicant to challenge this decision by way of an application to an Independent Monitor (as legislated for in section 82 of the Protection of Freedoms Act 2012):

... the Protection of Freedoms Act 2012 made provision for a new independent process known as ‘Review’, with oversight by an appointed Independent Monitor for Disclosure, giving applicant’s further opportunity to challenge a disclosure. QAF will support this independent review as the Independent Monitor will assess

\(^{26}\) DBS/ACPO, Quality Assurance Framework, MP7a and MP7b v9 disclosure rationale and method: General Guidance, March 2014, p6

\(^{27}\) DBS/ACPO, QAF GD4: Representations Guidance, June 2013, p1

\(^{28}\) Ibid

\(^{29}\) Standards and Compliance Unit, Quality Assurance Framework: An applicant’s introduction to the decision-making process for Enhanced Criminal Record Checks, March 2014, p10 whether or not police applied QAF correctly when processing an application. Where necessary, the Independent Monitor may also advise of changes that should be made to QAF to keep it as effective as possible, thus ensuring that QAF continues to meet the requirements of legislation and case law.

If you are in receipt of a disclosure that you know to be inaccurate or believe should not have been made – either at all or in part – please do not panic or worry: remember that there are mechanisms in place to put things right.30

The form for raising a dispute, and associated guidance, is available via the DBS on Gov.uk: see DBS certificate disputes and fingerprint consent forms.

30 Ibid, p13
4. The disclosure of old and/or minor conviction information

4.1 The Home Office Review

As part of her review of criminal records, the Independent Adviser for Criminality Information Management, Sunita Mason, also considered the issue of disclosing old and minor conviction information as part of standard and enhanced criminal records checks.

She did not recommend any change in the rules permitting an individual’s PNC record to be retained until his or her 100th birthday. She did, however, recommend the introduction of a new “filtering mechanism” to prevent old and/or minor convictions from appearing on a criminal records check.31

In her phase 1 report, Ms Mason said that in many cases the disclosure of minor information placed “an unnecessary burden on the lives of individuals”, particularly where the conviction was old and the individual concerned posed no significant public protection risk to children or vulnerable adults. However, she said that wider public protection needs meant that certain types of conviction should always be disclosed, for example if they related to offences in the following categories:

- assault and violence against the person;
- affray, riot and violent disorder;
- aggravated criminal damage;
- arson;
- drink and drug driving;
- drug offences;
- robbery; and
- sexual offences.

She also said that old and minor conviction information should not be ignored if it represented a pattern of criminal behaviour rather than a one-off offence.32

Ms Mason subsequently set up a panel of experts to look more closely at a new mechanism to filter old and minor convictions. Panel members included representatives from the Information Commissioner’s Office, ACPO, the Criminal Records Bureau, the NSPCC, Unlock and Liberty. In a report published in December 2011, Ms Mason set out the following general principles as agreed by the panel:

- Filtering should include convictions, cautions, warnings and reprimands, aligned to the conviction type;
- There should be a consultation process before a particular conviction type can be subject to filtering;

15 The retention and disclosure of criminal records

- Extra consideration should be given to convictions, cautions, warnings and reprimands defined as minor received by individuals before their 18th birthday;
- There should be a defined period of time after which minor convictions, cautions, warnings and reprimands (as defined) are not disclosed. This would cover the old element of the proposal;
- The rules should ensure that no conviction is filtered if it is not “spent” under the provisions of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act;
- Particular care should be taken before considering any sexual, drug related or violent offence type for filtering;
- Where any conviction, caution, warning or reprimand recorded against an individual falls outside of the minor definition then ALL convictions should be disclosed even if they would otherwise be considered as minor;
- The filtering rules should be both simple and understandable to individuals who are users and/or customers of the disclosure service.³³

She commented that there had been a lack of evidence-based research for the panel to consider, and that there should therefore “initially be a cautious approach to implementation of any proposal for filtering”. She suggested the following basic structure:

- A threshold pertaining to the number of convictions, cautions, warnings and reprimands defined as minor should be applied. In the first instance, this should be set at 1 (one). This would allow individuals to be given “a second chance” where a conviction is defined as minor and it meets the time definition for filtering.
- There would need to be an exception to this principle where several minor disposals related to the same set of events. This should not preclude them being filtered out in appropriate circumstances.
- For individuals (over 18 at the point of conviction) a period of 3 years should have elapsed before the conviction is filtered out.
- For individuals (under 18 at the point of conviction) there should be an elapsed period of 6 months before a single minor conviction, caution, warning or reprimand is filtered out.³⁴

Alternative approaches could involve linking the filtering date to the penalty administered (a similar approach to the way in which convictions become spent under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974), or requiring the courts or the police to take filtering decisions on a case-by-case basis.

In its response to Ms Mason’s report on the panel review in 2012, the Government said it was “continuing to keep the relevant legislation under review”, commenting that this was “a complex area raising difficult issues of principle and process and there is no consensus between all the interested parties on how these should be resolved to deliver a workable scheme”.

³³ Sunita Mason, Filtering of Old and Minor Offending from Criminal Records Bureau Disclosures, December 2011, p2
³⁴ Ibid, pp2-3

4.2 Court of Appeal ruling- January 2013

The issue was given a degree of urgency in January 2013 after the Court of Appeal ruled that mandatory and blanket disclosure as part of a standard or enhanced criminal records check was incompatible with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights (right to respect for private life).

The main case considered by the Court involved an individual referred to as T, who had received two police warnings relating to two stolen bicycles when he was 11 years old. He was otherwise of good character, and had believed that his warnings were spent. However, they had appeared on an enhanced criminal records check carried out when he was aged 17 after he applied to work at a local football club, and on a further enhanced criminal records check issued when he was aged 19 after he enrolled on a sports studies course at university.

The Court acknowledged that the disclosure of conviction information furthered both the general aim of protecting employers and, in particular, children and vulnerable adults in their care, and the particular aim of enabling an employer to assess whether an individual was suitable for a particular kind of work. However, it considered that “the statutory regime requiring the disclosure of all convictions and cautions relating to recordable offences is disproportionate to that legitimate aim”. It went on:

The fundamental objection to the scheme is that it does not seek to control the disclosure of information by reference to whether it is relevant to the purpose of enabling employers to assess the suitability of an individual for a particular kind of work. Relevance must depend on a number of factors including the seriousness of the offence; the age of the offender at the time of the offence; the sentence imposed or other manner of disposal; the time that has elapsed since the offence was committed; whether the individual has subsequently re-offended; and the nature of the work that the individual wishes to do. These same factors also come into the picture when the balance is to be struck (as it must be) between the relevance of the information and the severity of any impact of the individual’s article 8(1) right.

The Court did not prescribe any solution to the incompatibility between the current disclosure scheme and Article 8, instead stating that it would be “for Parliament to devise a proportionate scheme”.

---

35 Letter from the Home Office and the Ministry of Justice to Sunita Mason, Filtering of old and minor offending from Criminal Records Bureau disclosures, 27 July 2012
36 R on the application of T, JB and AW v Chief Constable of Greater Manchester, Secretary of State for the Home Department and Secretary of State for Justice [2013] EWCA Civ 25
37 Ibid, at para 37
38 Ibid, at para 38
39 Ibid, at para 69
The Court directed that its decision should not take effect until the Supreme Court had determined the Government’s application for permission to appeal.\footnote{Ibid, at para 84}

4.3 Supreme Court ruling- June 2014

In May 2013 the Supreme Court granted the Government permission to appeal the Court of Appeal’s decision. The hearing took place on 9 and 10 December 2013 and judgment was given on 18 June 2014. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal against the declarations of incompatibility.\footnote{R (On the application of T and another) (Respondents) v Secretary of State for the Home Department and another (Appellants) [2014] UKSC 35}

The Supreme Court confirmed that the cautions imposed on T and on the other individuals represented aspects of their private lives, respect for which is guaranteed by Article 8. It found the requirement that a person disclose their previous convictions and cautions to a potential employer to constitute an interference with this right. The Court stated:

\[
\text{[I]n order for the interference to be “in accordance with the law”, there must be safeguards which have the effect of enabling the proportionality of the interference to be adequately examined.}
\]

The disclosure scheme, prior to amendments made in May 2013 to eliminate any incompatibility, was incompatible with Article 8:

\[
\text{…because of the cumulative effect of the failure to draw any distinction on the basis of the nature of the offence, the disposal in the case, the time which has elapsed since the offence took place or the relevance of the data to the employment sought, and the absence of any mechanism for independent review of a decision to disclose data…}
\]

4.4 The introduction of the filtering rules

In March 2013 the Government laid orders before Parliament to change the law so that certain spent disposals (e.g. old and minor convictions and cautions) would no longer be disclosed on a DBS certificate.\footnote{The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 ( Exceptions) Order 1975 (Amendment) (England and Wales) Order 2013 and The Police Act 1997 (Criminal Record Certificates: Relevant Matters) (Amendment) (England and Wales) Order 2013. These Orders were laid before the hearing of the appeal to the Supreme Court in the case of T took place}

The filtering rules for criminal record check certificates, which took effect from 29 May 2013 and applied to certificates issued before 28 November 2020 were as follows:

For those 18 or over at the time of the offence:

An adult conviction will be removed from a DBS certificate if:

- 11 years have elapsed since the date of conviction; and
- it is the person’s only offence, and
- it did not result in a custodial sentence

Even then, it will only be removed if it does not appear on the list of offences which will never be removed from a certificate. If a... person has more than one offence, then details of all their convictions will always be included.

An adult caution will be removed after 6 years have elapsed since the date of the caution – and if it does not appear on the list of offences relevant to safeguarding.

For those under 18 at the time of the offence:

The same rules apply as for adult convictions, except that the elapsed time period is 5.5 years.

The same rules apply as for adult cautions, except that the elapsed time period is 2 years.\(^{43}\)

Certain aspects of the filtering system were criticised as operating too bluntly and inflexibly.\(^{44}\) The rule that only a single conviction could be filtered, provided it did not result in a custodial sentence, meant that multiple convictions for lesser offences, no matter how long ago they occurred, could not be filtered.

4.5 Supreme Court ruling- January 2019

In January 2019 the Supreme Court gave judgment on a group of cases each concerning individuals who had been convicted or received cautions or reprimands in respect of relatively minor offending.\(^{45}\) Disclosure of the individuals’ criminal records to potential employers had made, or might in the future have made, it more difficult for them to obtain employment. The individuals challenged the disclosure schemes\(^{46}\) as being incompatible with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights, protecting the right to respect for private and family life.

The cases had been heard by first the High Court and then the Court of Appeal before reaching the Supreme Court on appeal by the Government. The courts considered whether the disclosure schemes interfered with the individuals’ Article 8 rights, and if they did so, whether this interference was in accordance with the law (the legality test) and necessary in a democratic society (the proportionality test).

The High Court and Court of Appeal had found that the schemes for disclosure were incompatible with Article 8 for failing the legality test because of the breadth of the categories in the legislation and were disproportionate for failing to sufficiently distinguish between convictions and cautions of varying degrees of relevance.

A majority of the Supreme Court dismissed the Government’s appeal (except in the case of one of the individuals, W). The Court said that the disclosure schemes did satisfy the legality test. On the proportionality test it said that categories used in the scheme were proportionate, with

---

\(^{43}\) Disclosure and Barring Service, Filtering rules for criminal record check certificates, 19 November 2020

\(^{44}\) See, for example, the work of the charity Unlock, Policy issues: filtering

\(^{45}\) R (on the application of P, G and W) (Respondents) v Secretary of State for the Home Department and another (Appellants)

For details of the facts of each of the cases see the Supreme Court’s press summary

\(^{46}\) The schemes are those under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 and Part V of the Police Act 1997 two exceptions: the multiple convictions rule and the disclosure of warnings and reprimands for younger offenders.

The multiple convictions rule
The filtering rules as introduced in 2013 meant that where a person had more than one conviction, no filtering took place and all convictions appeared on the person’s certificate. The Supreme Court said that this rule did not achieve its purpose of indicating propensity as it applied irrespective of the nature, similarity, number or time intervals of offences. The Court said the rule was disproportionate and incompatible with Article 8.

Warnings and reprimands for younger offenders
The Supreme Court also ruled that the disclosure of warnings and reprimands (now replaced with youth cautions) was disproportionate and incompatible with Article 8. The Court said that the purpose of these disposals is instructive and specifically designed to avoid damaging effects later in life through disclosure.

4.6 Changes to the filtering rules
In response to the Supreme Court’s judgment, the Government laid orders to amend the filtering rules. These orders removed both the requirement for automatic disclosure of youth cautions, reprimands and warnings and the ‘multiple conviction’ rule. The new filtering rules, as amended by these orders apply to certificates issued on or after 28 November 2020.

New filtering rules for DBS certificates
Standard and Enhanced DBS certificates must always include the following records no matter when they were received:
- All convictions for specified offences
- Adult cautions for specified offences
- All convictions that resulted in a custodial sentence

Other records must be included depending on when the caution or conviction was received:
- Any adult caution for a non-specified offence received within the last 6 years
- Any adult conviction for a non-specified offence received within the last 11 years
- Any youth conviction for a non-specified offence received within the last 5 and a half years
- An ‘adult’ is any individual aged 18 or above at the time of the caution or conviction. A ‘youth’ is any individual aged under 18 at the time of the caution or conviction.

A ‘specified offence’ is one which is on the list of specified offences agreed by Parliament which will always be disclosed on a Standard or Enhanced DBS certificate where it resulted in a conviction or an adult caution. Youth cautions for specified offences will not be automatically disclosed.

---

Any cautions (including reprimands and warnings) and convictions not covered by the rules above are ‘protected’ and will not appear on a DBS certificate automatically.

Cautions, reprimands and warnings received when an individual was under 18 will not appear on a Standard or Enhanced certificate automatically.

Please note that Enhanced certificates may include information relating to a protected caution or conviction if the police consider that it is relevant to the workforce that the individual intends to work in. Decisions to include information in this way are subject to statutory guidance.

The list of specified offences, that will always be subject to disclosure, includes sexual and violent offences and other offences deemed relevant to safeguarding. Further information about the filtering rules can be found in the DBS filtering guide.

The charity Unlock welcomed the changes to the filtering rules as a “crucial first step towards achieving a fair system that takes a more balanced approach towards disclosing criminal records”. However, it called for a “wider review of the criminal records disclosure system to ensure all law-abiding people with criminal records are able to move on into employment and contribute to our economic recovery”.

---

49 Disclosure and Barring Service, List of offences that will never be filtered from a criminal record check
50 Unlock, press release, Government responds to Supreme Court ruling with plans to change criminal records disclosure regime, 9 July 2020
5. Calls for review and reform of disclosure

There have been a number of calls for a wider review and reform of the system of disclosing criminal records, particularly where a record was acquired when the individual was a child.

In 2016 the Law Commission was asked by the Home Office to review the specific area of law dealing with filtering. The terms of reference expressly limited the review to changes that could be achieved using only secondary legislation. However in its final report in January 2017, the Law Commission said there was a compelling case for a wider review of the disclosure system as a whole.

Our conclusion is that the present system raises significant concerns in relation to ECHR non-compliance and, what may be considered to be, the overly harsh outcomes stemming from a failure to incorporate either proportionality or relevance into disclosure decisions. An impenetrable legislative framework and questions of legal certainty further compound the situation. This is an area of law in dire need of thorough and expert analysis. A mere technical fix is not sufficient to tackle such interwoven and large scale problems.\(^{51}\)

The Justice Committee’s report into the disclosure of youth criminal records, published in October 2017, endorsed the Law Commission’s recommendation for a wider review of the whole disclosure system. The Committee’s report said:

We find it a matter of regret that the laudable principles of the youth justice system, to prevent offending by children and young people and to have regard to their welfare, are undermined by the system for disclosure of youth criminal records, which instead works to prevent children from moving on from their past and creates a barrier to rehabilitation.\(^{52}\)

The Committee’s recommendations included:

- Introducing lists of non-filterable offences customised for particular areas of employment, together with a threshold test for disclosure that is based on disposal/sentence; and
- Reducing qualifying periods for the filtering of childhood convictions and cautions.

It also recommended that the Government consider the feasibility of extending this new approach, possibly with modifications, to the disclosure of offences committed by young adults up to the age of 25.

Charlie Taylor in his review of youth justice, published in 2016, proposed the Government develop a distinct approach to how childhood offending is treated by the criminal records system. He said the criminal records system should be more sensitive to the transitory nature of much childhood offending, and to the limited future risk of offending that most crimes committed in childhood actually present. In his view, all childhood offending (except for the most serious offences) should become non-disclosable after a period of time and the circumstances in which police intelligence on childhood conduct can be disclosed should be further restricted.\(^{53}\)

\(^{51}\) Law Commission, Criminal Records Disclosure: Non-Filterable Offences, HC 971, 31 January 2017, p127

\(^{52}\) Justice Committee, Disclosure of youth criminal records, HC 416, 27 October 2017, p9

David Lammy in his independent review into the treatment of, and outcomes for, Black, Asian and Minority Ethnic individuals in the Criminal Justice System, published in 2017, said that the current criminal records regime is “making work harder to find for those who need it the most” and that “a more flexible system is required, which is capable of recognising when people have changed and no longer pose a significant risk to others”.\(^{54}\) He recommended a system for sealing criminal records:

> Individuals should be able to have their case heard either by a judge or a body like the Parole Board, which would then decide whether to seal their record. There should be a presumption to look favourably on those who committed crimes either as children or young adults but can demonstrate that they have changed since their conviction.\(^{55}\)

The Fair Checks campaign run by the charities Unlock and Transform Justice calls on the Home Office and the Ministry of Justice to launch a major review of the legislation on the disclosure of criminal records. They say they want a disclosure system that is “fair and gives people a genuine chance of moving on and contributing fully to society”. Specifically, they call for:

- Reducing the length of time a person’s conviction is revealed on basic checks.
- Making a more proportionate and flexible system to what is revealed on standard and enhanced checks that protects the public without unduly harming people’s opportunity to get on in life.
- A distinct approach to records acquired in childhood and a more nuanced approach to those acquired in early adulthood.
- The introduction of review mechanisms so that no one has to face a lifetime being held back by their past without the prospect of review at some point.\(^{56}\)

---

\(^{53}\) Ministry of Justice, Review of the Youth Justice System in England and Wales, Charlie Taylor, December 2016, p25

\(^{54}\) The Lammy Review: An independent review into the treatment of, and outcomes for, Black, Asian and Minority Ethnic individuals in the Criminal Justice System, September 2017, p66

\(^{55}\) Ibid

\(^{56}\) Unlock, Policy Issues, Fair Checks
5.1 Government policy

The Government, in its September 2020 White Paper, A Smarter Approach to Sentencing, said that it wanted to “go further on criminal records disclosure to support those who offended in the past to move on with their lives and in particular to improve access to employment for those with criminal records”. In addition to the changes to the filtering rules noted in section 4.6 above, the Government proposed changes to the rehabilitation periods that govern the length of time before a conviction becomes “spent”. 57 For more information on this see the Library briefing paper The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974.

---

About the Library

The House of Commons Library research service provides MPs and their staff with the impartial briefing and evidence base they need to do their work in scrutinising Government, proposing legislation, and supporting constituents.

As well as providing MPs with a confidential service we publish open briefing papers, which are available on the Parliament website.

Every effort is made to ensure that the information contained in these publically available research briefings is correct at the time of publication. Readers should be aware however that briefings are not necessarily updated or otherwise amended to reflect subsequent changes.

If you have any comments on our briefings please email papers@parliament.uk. Authors are available to discuss the content of this briefing only with Members and their staff.

If you have any general questions about the work of the House of Commons you can email hcinfo@parliament.uk.

Disclaimer

This information is provided to Members of Parliament in support of their parliamentary duties. It is a general briefing only and should not be relied on as a substitute for specific advice. The House of Commons or the author(s) shall not be liable for any errors or omissions, or for any loss or damage of any kind arising from its use, and may remove, vary or amend any information at any time without prior notice.

The House of Commons accepts no responsibility for any references or links to, or the content of, information maintained by third parties. This information is provided subject to the conditions of the Open Parliament Licence.