2 Proposed reform of the Common Fisheries Policy

The European Commission presented a “package” of proposals for legislation and communications to the Agriculture and Fisheries Council of 19 July 2011. A further proposal on the financial framework was presented on 2 December 2011.

Proposals for legislation

Proposal for a Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council on the Common Fisheries Policy (presented 19 July 2011) 12514/2011, COM(2011)425. This proposal replaces the basic provisions of the Common Fisheries Policy (repealing Regulation(EC) 2371/2002).

Proposal for a Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council on the Common Organisation of the Markets in Fishery and Aquaculture Products (presented 19 July 2011) 12516/2011, COM(2011)416. This proposal focuses on market policy issues.

Proposal for a Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council on the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund \[repealing Council Regulation \(EC\) No 1198/2006 and Council Regulation\(EC\) No 861/2006 and Council Regulation No XXX/2011 on integrated maritime policy (presented 2 December 2011) 17870/2011, COM(2011)804. This proposal replaces the existing European Fisheries Fund by integrating current CFP and IMP financial instruments into one fund, (with the exception of Sustainable Fisheries Agreements (SFAs) and the compulsory contribution to Regional Fisheries Management Organisation -RFMOs).

6.1 Parliamentary questions

Oliver Colvile (Plymouth, Sutton and Devonport) (Con): What recent discussions she has had on reform of the common fisheries policy.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Richard Benyon): As UK Fisheries Minister, I continue to have discussions about the reform of the common fisheries policy with a wide range of people and organisations, including the EU Commission, Members of the UK and European Parliaments and ministerial colleagues from other member states, as well as representatives of fishing and related industries. I will continue to press our case for reform, as the negotiations develop in the Council and European Parliament.

Oliver Colvile: May I urge my hon. Friend to press for UK fishing waters to come back under UK control, and to sort out the loopy idea that the Austrians might end up having a vote on the common fisheries policy even though they do not have a single piece of coastline?

Richard Benyon: I understand my hon. Friend's concerns. That debate will perhaps be had at a higher level than mine, but he should remember two things. First, we are dealing with an industry in crisis, so urgency is a real factor for those involved in the fishing industry, both in his constituency and everywhere else. Secondly, we would need a mechanism for dealing with other countries whether we were covered by the common fisheries policy or not, because fish do not respect borders. We would have to continue to deal with historical fishing rights, which go beyond our membership of the common fisheries policy. I take seriously my responsibility, given the door that has been opened by the Commission's position on the subject, to push for real, genuine, radical reform that can improve the situation for fishermen and the marine environment.

Dr Eilidh Whiteford (Banff and Buchan) (SNP): Alongside CFP reform, the ongoing mackerel dispute with Iceland and the Faroe islands continues to cause great concern, not just for pelagic fishermen but for the white fish fleet and fish processors. Will the Minister update the House on the progress of negotiations with Iceland and tell us, in the event of a deal, what recompense will be made available to Scottish fishermen? Might it possibly take the form of additional quota?

Richard Benyon: I cannot give the hon. Lady that precise information at the moment. I can tell her that there has been a slight improvement in the relationship with the Icelanders, and I hope that we can build on that. I am still pessimistic about our discussions with the Faroese, but I assure her that I will keep her closely involved, because we are talking about our most valuable fishery. It is sustainable, and we face a severe risk of losing marine stewardship accreditation for the stock, which would cause great harm to her constituents and our economy.

Sheryll Murray (South East Cornwall) (Con): For the first time, I do not have to declare an interest in the subject.

Will the Minister update the House on any representations that he has made during the ongoing negotiations to enable the United Kingdom to introduce a higher standard of fisheries management for all fishing vessels fishing within our 12-mile limit, and say whether any member states have pledged support for that?

Richard Benyon: I continue to work with other member states to get across our view that where we are creating marine conservation zones outside the 6-mile limit, we should not be controlling the activities of our fishermen while allowing fishermen from other countries to continue to operate as they did. There has to be a level playing field. On fisheries safety and the development of control orders, which came in under the previous Government, this is the opportunity to make sure that fishermen from other countries behave as we require our fishermen to behave. It is really important that we follow through with that. We have allies in Europe, and I am determined to make sure that an even-handed approach is taken.

HC Deb 13 October 2011 c462-3

Lord Kennedy of Southwark To ask Her Majesty's Government what action they are taking to reduce the discarding of fish

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Lord Taylor of Holbeach): Discards are a clear waste of natural resources, disruptive to marine ecosystems and ethically undesirable. The UK is seeking fundamental reform of the Common Fisheries Policy (CFP) to minimise this wasteful practice, but we are also taking action now to cut discards and to gather the necessary evidence to reform the CFP.

The UK has run successful trials to test catch quota (CQ) management on North Sea cod in 2010, and extended these trials in 2011 to include Western Channel sole. CO is designed to measure quota uptake at point of capture rather than counting uptake by landings. Results to date are very positive. Initial findings from schemes run in England this year show only 0.25 per cent of total catches of prohibited species were discarded and overall catches of undersized fish of any species are low, indicating the effectiveness of selectivity measures. We are seeking to extend these trials in 2012, through negotiations with the European Commission and, in some instances, Norway, to test CO in mixed fisheries and in fisheries where discards are high.

We are also conducting a wide range of work to improve the selectivity of fishing gear, with the aim of getting fishermen to catch less unwanted fish in the first place. These include initiatives in the Irish Sea and the south-west (Project 50 per cent).

Following the Commission's proposals for reform of the CFP, from next year we will also aim to undertake discard ban trials to understand how a landing obligation can work in practice. These will be supported by studies on the survivability rates of certain species if they are discarded.

In addition, the UK's Fishing for the Market project was aimed at the market side of the industry and sought to increase consumer demand for underutilised, sustainable species that are often discarded. Defra is currently considering how recommendations can be taken forward in partnership with members of the seafood industry.

We are involving fishermen at every opportunity in work to cut discards. They are best placed to advise about what works in a fishery in practice as a one-size approach does not fit all.

HL Deb 21 November 2011 Col 189-90WA

Zac Goldsmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the contribution by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Natural Environment and Fisheries of 14 July 2011, Official Report, columns 472-81, what progress her Department has made on negotiations for reform of the Common Fisheries Policy to restore UK control over its 12 nautical mile territorial waters.

Richard Benyon: As UK Fisheries Minister I am continuing to seek, through negotiations on the reform of the Common Fisheries Policy, a simplified and decentralised decision-making framework. As part of this I am pressing for clear arrangements providing for member states to take non-discriminatory measures for the conservation and management of fish stocks and to minimise the effect of fishing on the conservation of marine ecosystems within their 12 mile limits. Such measures should apply to all vessels fishing within that zone, no matter what member state they are from.

HC Deb 31 January 2012 c537W

Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures his Department plans to carry out to implement the discard ban under the Common Fisheries Policy.

Richard Benyon: The UK successfully made the case for the phased introduction of a landing obligation for commercial fish species throughout EU waters in the General Approach on the draft Common Fisheries Policy Regulation that was agreed by European Fisheries Ministers in June 2012. Included within the General Approach are a number of provisions designed to support member states in the implementation of a discard ban.

However, the General Approach is not the end of the reform process, and the European Parliament will now give its views on the proposals. The regulation is not expected to be formally agreed until mid 2013. The UK continues to test fisheries management systems with fishermen, including Catch Quota management and the trial and introduction of selective gears to significantly reduce the level of discards. It is through such trials that we can gain accurate and practical information to implement any discard ban effectively.

Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) to which geographical areas the discard ban to begin in 2015 will apply; (2) when he expects a discard ban to be fully implemented under the Common Fisheries Policy.

Richard Benyon: The UK successfully made the case for the phased introduction of a landing obligation for commercial fish species throughout EU waters in the General Approach on the draft Common Fisheries Policy (CFP) Regulation that was agreed by European Fisheries Ministers in June 2012. The General Approach includes a provisional date of 1 January 2014 for a landing obligation for pelagic species, with a phased introduction, starting in 2015 and fully in place by 2018, for other Northern Atlantic fisheries. For other waters, including the Mediterranean and Black Sea, the provisional phase-in period is from 2016 to 2019.

These dates are not yet agreed, however, as the relevant provisions are still under negotiation. The European Parliament is also now considering the CFP proposals.

HC Deb 7 September 2012 c514-5W

Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much each EU member has contributed to the Common Fisheries Policy in each of the last five years; and how much each contributing member has received through this policy in that time

Richard Benyon: Member states contribute to the overall EU budget (the Multi-Annual Financial Framework) rather than to individual budget lines or programmes, such as the European Fisheries Fund (EFF) or common fisheries policy (CFP).

Details of how much each member state has received from the EFF (the financial instrument of the CFP) over the last five years can be found on the Europa website:

http://ec.europa.eu/fisheries/documentation/publications/cfp_factsheets/european_fisheries_fund_en.pdf

Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how the revised Common Fisheries Policy is to be financed; and what the scale of contribution from each EU member state will be.

Richard Benyon: Much of the cost of the practical operation of the common fisheries policy (CFP) will continue to be borne by individual member states within their respective jurisdictions. In the case of the UK, many elements of fisheries management are devolved and therefore funded by devolved Administrations.

Some parts of the CFP are funded by the EU budget, such as the EU contribution to the new European Maritime and Fisheries Fund and the Fisheries Partnership Agreements with developing countries. Member states contribute to the EU budget as a whole and not to individual parts of it.

Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the purchase of fishing rights from third party nations is permitted under the new common fisheries policy settlement.

Richard Benyon: Under the common fisheries policy the European Union may enter into fisheries partnership agreements with third party countries to provide access for EU vessels to fisheries resources in their waters.

As part of the reforms we have secured to the common fisheries policy, fishing agreements with third party countries must deliver increased value for money for the taxpayer and be based on sound science and monitoring, with clauses on respect for human rights.

Agriculture and Fisheries Council

The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Mrs Caroline Spelman): The Agriculture and Fisheries Council on Tuesday 12 June in Luxembourg dealt only with fisheries business. The Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Richard Benyon) represented the UK. Richard Lochhead MSP and Alun Davies AM were also in attendance.

The agenda was confined to discussion of the three main common fisheries policy (CFP) reform regulations. Following previous discussions of key aspects of the package at Council in March, April and May, the presidency aimed to agree Council general approaches on the CFP basic regulation and common market organisation (CMO) proposals. The presidency also submitted a progress report for Council to note on the later proposal for a European maritime and fisheries fund (EMFF), on which there had been insufficient time for agreement to be reached.

Following an initial table round it was clear that the main outstanding issues on the compromise texts related to discards, maximum sustainable yield (MSY), and regionalisation. On discards, a significant number of member states were opposed to early deadlines for the introduction of landing obligations, or opposed to legal provisions on the elimination of discards in principle. On MSY, some member states were reluctant to agree challenging targets and raised concerns about practical implications in specific fisheries. Many member states expressed concerns about the role of the Commission under a regionalised process.

Discussions of these issues continued throughout the day and into the early hours of the following morning with the presidency pushing hard for agreement to a general approach. The UK played a major role in the process, forming alliances in support of our objectives and helping to shape the final compromise texts.

Council eventually reached agreement on a general approach on the CFP reform regulations which met many of the UK's objectives. The agreement included introduction of a discard ban by 1 Jan 2014 for pelagic stocks and phased introduction beginning in 2015 and fully in place by 2018 for other UK fisheries; deadlines for the achievement of maximum sustainable yield (MSY) levels in fisheries by 2015 where possible, and by 2020 at the latest; and agreement on the processes to regionalise decision making in line with the proposals the UK had developed with other member states. This was an important first step in securing genuine and effective CFP reform. The final agreement through co-decision with the European Parliament is not expected to be concluded until late 2013.
